THREE CENTS

Dubinsky's Union Quits CIO; to Work For Peace

Garment Body Votes Rejects A. F. L. Link Cites Vote 'Setback' Blames Labor Strife

John L. Lewis and the C. I. O. rebuffed at the polls in both primary and general elections, yesterday suffered another severe loss when the International Ladies Garment Workers Union refused to continue in the C. I. O.'s projected permanent organization.

The executive board of the union, headed by David Dubinsky, in session here, voted to continue independent of both the American Federation of Labor and the Committee for Industrial Organization. Thus, in the opinion of observers, the Dubinsky union placed itself in a strategic position to act as a peace-making medium at any future time when the peace sentiment becomes more insistent.

Dubinsky himself has been one of the most active seekers after a reconciliation in the labor movement, and the executive board's resolution yesterday repeated frequently the desire for a reunion of the two huge forces.

Blames 'Setback' on Split

It declared the labor split was one of the main causes of "the setback suffered by the progressive and liberal forces" in Tuesday's election, and said that until the factions headed by Lewis and William Green, A. F. L. president, can be brought together again, the I. L. G. W. U. will not enter either group.

The union will, however, "support every genuine effort, whether C. I. O. or A. F. L., in their organizational activities for the improvement of the conditions of the workers, and in every effort to achieve peace in the labor movement."

Meanwhile, the C. I. O. forces, starting their constitutional convention at Pittsburgh, continued drawing up the agenda and selecting committees, paying little attention outwardly to the I. L. G. W. U. action.

Founder of C. I. O.

The garment workers union was one of the ten A. F. L. groups which united to form the C. I. O. All were suspended by the federation, which charged they were fomenting "dual unionism." All but the garment workers later were expelled by the A. F. L.

The union, which has some 250,000 members, has been engaged since last December in promoting peace in the labor ranks, but on Thursday the executive board accepted a report from its special peace committee which said that due to Lewis' unyielding stand, further reunion efforts at present were futile.

Board's Resolution

The board's resolution yesterday said:

"We do not believe now and we never believed, that two separate labor movements are required to achieve the common objectives of labor. We believe now as we have always believed, that one unified labor organization in this country could and should bring the benefits of organization to all wage earners in the land whether in the mass production or skilled industries, and protect labor against its economic as well as political enemies.

"Being vitally interested in the reconciliation of the two parts of the labor movement, we therefore decided that until peace is established in the labor movement, or otherwise decided by a regular or special convention of our union, we remain an independent union."

It declared that "we readily acknowledge the historic service performed by the C. I. O. in organizing large numbers of workers in the mass production industries who had

G.O.P. to Ask WPA Inquiry In Congress

Democrats Talk Unity Republicans Scoff Rayburn Optimistic Roosevelt Laughs

By Robert C. Albright. Democratic House and Senate leaders joined with President Roosevelt yesterday in predicting more solid Democratic unity next session, while Republican leaders scoffed at the forecast and proposed for a starter a bi-partisan congressional WPA inquiry.

The United States Chamber of Commerce business review predicted closer scrutiny and "stiffer resistance" to "ill-advised and hastily drawn legislation."

Plans for a Democratic leadership conference with the President on the session's program, probably at Warm Springs, Georgia, late this month were hinted by House Majority Leader Sam Rayburn.

Following a noon-day conference with the President, Rayburn echoed Mr. Roosevelt's earlier expressed view that the Administration had little to fear from coalition opposition to the New Deal program.

Brown Sees Cohesion

"Democrats will be more inclined to be Democrats," said Rayburn. Expanding on this theme, Senator Brown, chairman of the Democratic senatorial campaign committee, declared the election would result in "more cohesive action" by Democrats.

"There is no reason for the liberals in America to be distressed by the outcome of the election," said Brown.

But Representative Martin, of Massachusetts, the man who probably will lead the strengthened Republican minority in the House, declared majority leaders are over-optimistic on unity prospects.

"No Actual Coalition"

"Everything will depend on the legislation submitted," said Martin, who directed the Republican Congressional campaign.

"Of course, there will be no actual coalition. Democrats and Republicans will vote on the measure submitted. But on any extreme legislation, I think Democrats will be more likely than ever to vote with Republicans."

Then Martin announced he would propose at the outset of next session a House committee investigation of the Works Progress Administration, which he predicted would receive alike Republican and Democratic support.

Chamber Pleased

"Before we get through, we will accomplish two things," said Martin. "We will put on the record overwhelming evidence of graft and corruption and political misuse of relief funds. Second, I think we are assured of legislation giving us non-partisan administration of relief."

The United States Chamber of Commerce biweekly review interpreted election results as a "go slow" signal "reassuring to business." The bulletin forecast "an

5 Drown in Mud As Auto Sinks In Hunting Creek

Two women and three men were believed drowned in soft mud at Hunting Creek, below Alexandria, Va., on U. S. Highway No. 1, early this morning when their automobile went off the road in heavy fog.

James Bernard Holloway, colored, 30, of 2449 P street northwest, told police he was in the automobile when it left the road and none of his companions escaped. He swam ashore while the car slowly settled into the ooze, its occupants screaming for help.

John Hume, 23, of 1982 Second street northwest, told police he passed the spot, heard Holloway calling for help then saw him perched on top of the nearly submerged automobile. Holloway was treated at Alexandria Hospital for shock and exposure while Alexandria, Fairfax and Virginia State police grappled for the automobile under the glare of searchlights.

Holloway said the men were Timothy Covington, 25, driver; William Covington, 24, and John Watlington, 25, all of Washington. He did not know the women, he said.

2-Price Plan Shelved by Business Fear

Mattress Trade Balks Scheme 'Only Theory' Co-operation Prevails 2 Committees Named

Retail business fears of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace's "two-price" plan yesterday forced at least temporary suspension of the proposal at an Agriculture Department conference on utilization of surplus cotton.

Mattress manufacturers, retailers and wholesalers were assured that the plan was "only a theory" and one of many proposals put forward for disposal of this country's huge cotton and other surpluses. The assurances followed outspoken objections to the plan at the meeting. The conference, first of several to be called to find farm surplus outlets in domestic markets, studied low-cost cotton bedding as one of the largest potential fields for the huge cotton surplus.

Two Committees Named

It ended on a co-operative note, with the appointment of two committees to seek surplus liquidation. One committee, headed by Lew Hahn, of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, will study private enterprise outlets for cotton through improved sales methods and development of new uses. The other, headed by Dr. Claudius Murchison, of the Cotton Textile Institute, will study Government liquidation channels—disposal through WPA, Army and Navy, "and other appropriate Federal and State institutions."

A statement by R. W. Schwab, of the Southern Spring Co., Atlanta, Ga., said the Agriculture Department "set a most encouraging example to trade and industry" by calling the conference, and a "wholly co-operative attitude" was displayed at the meeting.

Wallace's two-price plan, under which subsidized sales of surplus products would be made at below-market prices to the lower income groups, had been expected to figure prominently for the first time in the cotton bedding conference.

Namm Votes Fear

Near the start of the conference, Hahn made clear that he did not see anything his group could do on the two-price proposal, and said he was afraid of it, but offered to co-operate on the broader question of increased cotton utilization. Maj. R. H. Namm, of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, also voiced fear of the plan.

Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Harry L. Brown then assured the group that the conference was primarily called to find new uses for cotton, and not to discuss the two-price system, which he said was only one of many proposals advanced. He said his cotton consumption committee would leave discussion of concrete proposals to others, including the industry.

"We intend to carry out our program in co-operation with the cotton industry and have no intention of benefiting any one group at the expense of another."

Mrs. Bruce Hurt As Horse Falls Dead in Hunt

Philadelphia, Nov. 11 (P).—Mrs. Howard Bruce, wife of the Democratic National Committeeman from Maryland, was injured seriously today when her horse dropped dead while she was riding to hounds on an estate near here.

Mrs. Bruce was taken to a hospital in Kennett Square, Pa., where physicians said her right side was paralyzed.

With her husband, Mrs. Bruce were on a holiday hunt on the estate of W. Plunkett Stewart, master of hounds of the Chester Hunt.

Between 30 and 40 socially prominent horsemen and horsewomen from Baltimore, New York and Philadelphia were participating.

Hit-Run Driver Saved From Mob

Lowell, Mass., Nov. 11 (P).—A hit-run driver, whose automobile carried the dead body of his victim for more than a quarter-mile, was rescued from mob violence by police tonight.

James M. Shanley, 35, of Lowell, arrested on charges of drunkenness, operating under the influence of liquor, manslaughter, leaving the scene of an accident and driving so as to endanger, had to be beaten into submission, police said.

The victim, Hubert Boyle, 25, of Lowell, was killed instantly, a medical examiner said. Shanley fell into the hands of infuriated pursuers when a rear wheel was broken off as his car struck a curb.

The conference then adopted a resolution urging the government to directly organize children's period-

D. C. Celebrants Assail 'Armistice of Munich'

Gen. John J. Pershing, commander of the A. E. F. in the World War, honors the Unknown Soldier by placing a wreath on his tomb in Armistice Day ceremonies.

Death Held Small Price to Pay for Ideals Gen. Ely Cries, 'Let Us Talk Force' Roosevelt at Unknown Soldier's Tomb

As Washingtonians joined in the most significant Armistice Day celebration since 1918 they heard speakers condemn the "Peace of Munich" as an immoral pact, demand that the Monroe Doctrine be "re-established" in the western hemisphere, and assert—amid loud applause—that death is a small price to pay for the ideals which sent this country into the World War.

"Many of us said, 'Never again!' but, now that we are learning that it takes two to have peace, let us talk force," declared Maj. Gen. Hanson E. Ely, retired commander of the Second Division, in a speech at the division's flaming sword monument on Constitution avenue.

"If it comes to a choice between ideals and the fear of bombs, let's have the strength to keep our heads in the air."

It is of little worth that we kneel reverently in our cathedrals and churches to do homage to Him who died for human redemption unless we are prepared at any cost to press His claims upon a reluctant, disobedient, and war-crazed world," Bishop James E. Freeman declared at services before the tomb of Woodrow Wilson in the Washington Cathedral.

Roosevelt Lays Wreath

Commander Stephen F. Chadwick, speaking from Arlington Cemetery in the principal American Legion celebration of the day, declared the ideals of 1918 "will not be lost."

The Unknown Soldier, at whose tomb President Roosevelt placed a wreath at 11 a. m., "died for peace" and the Americans who have come after him will keep faith with him. Commander Chadwick asserted as he called for increased preparedness and enactment of a universal service act.

"Right must prevail and eternal truth must be re-established," he declared.

American Comics Found Making Young Italians Sissies

By James M. Minifie Special Cable to The Post.

Rome, Nov. 11.—Popeye the Sailor and Mickey Mouse are unsuitable for Italian children's minds, which must be steered through the medium of juvenile papers to the imperial spirit of the Fascist revolution, the National Conference on Juvenile Literature decided in Bologna yesterday.

Dr. Gherardo Casini, director general of the Italian press department of the ministry of popular culture, told the conference the ministry had already made plans for a fundamental transformation of children's papers and magazines. Editors have received orders to eliminate anything which goes counter to Italianism or to the formation of racial pride and consciousness.

He advised his hearers Italian children should be trained in the principles of "sleeping with the head on a knapsack."

The conference then adopted a resolution urging the government to directly organize children's period-

Anti-Semitism Flares

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Nov. 11.—Germany's sudden Nation-wide outbreak of anti-Semitism developed tonight into a series of secret police raids upon Jews of the upper classes amid reports that the ghetto of the Middle Ages was to be re-established in the modern Nazi Reich.

Germany officially warned Jews abroad, especially in the United States, that their "behavior" would affect future treatment of Jews in Germany.

Propaganda Minister Goebbels, writing for tomorrow's Voelkischer Beobachter an article intended to justify the anti-Jewish actions, expressed annoyance at what he termed "misrepresentations and distortions" of happenings here, especially in the reports of "the Jewish press of North America."

Jews of World Warned

"This will do no good to Jews in Germany," Goebbels wrote. "Rather the reverse. The German people are an anti-Semitic people, and will not tolerate having their rights curtailed or being provoked by the Jewish press."

"The anti-German outside world will do well to leave solution of the Jewish problem to Germans. If the outside world wants the Jews, it can have them."

[Goebbels also wrote in the Voelkischer Beobachter that the killing of Ernst vom Rath, Paris embassy official, was at the command of "the Jewish organization, which systematically prepared him (Herschel Grynszpan) for this cold-blooded murder," the United Press said.

He added, "The Jews in the background chose a youth as the perpetrator in order to conceal their culpability."—Editor's note.]

Pillaging in Revenge

The article expressed the government's official attitude regarding the anti-Semitic reprisals, which began early yesterday with smashing of Jewish property and synagogues throughout the country in revenge for the slaying of vom Rath.

Earlier in a press interview, Goebbels said, "If Jews abroad have a heart for their coreligionists in Germany, let them be truthful in what they say about us. From their own standpoint I consider them unwise in writing so much about the Jews in Germany."

A trainload of 800 Jewish prisoners left Vienna tonight for an undisclosed destination.

Official information was lacking but it was understood they were being transported to a German concentration camp, possibly Dachau or Buchenwald.

An undetermined number were arrested in tonight's secret police raids among the upper Jewish classes. Jews estimated between 700 and 1,000 had been taken into custody in Berlin since yesterday, while further arrests in Munich brought the total there to an estimated 1,400. Several thousand

John, The Bath, Grin and Bear It

Typical Ward Boss, Passes

Dies in Chicago at 78
46 Years an Alderman
Ruled Loop Section

Special Dispatch to The Post

Chicago, Nov. 11.—John J. Coughlin, 78, died today.

He was 78. Weakened by a year of invalidism, he succumbed to a two-day-old attack of pneumonia at Mercy Hospital.

In close and understanding partnership with Michael (Hinky Dink) McKenna, Coughlin, bossed the polyglot First Ward, embracing banks, brokerage houses, and the city's grandest and worst slums, its busiest saloons or speakeasies.

Archetype of the American city-ward boss, "Bathhouse John" supplied Robin Hood ethics to metropolitan politics. If the Municipal Voters League periodically urged the electorate to oust Boss Coughlin in the interest of low taxes and a more efficient municipal administration, thousands of families living in the First Ward knew his generosity. They regularly turned out the vote which made him probably the most re-elected official in the world.

Never Refused a Handout

"The Bath" was never known to turn down a hungry constituent or one likely to become a constituent. As late as last Tuesday's election, the First Ward went Democratic, as usual.

Alderman Coughlin was born two blocks south of what is now the southwest limit of The Loop on August 15, 1860. It was then a neighborhood of attractive frame houses and gardens.

His father was a well-to-do lumberman, growing richer as Chicago grew. In recent years, "Bathhouse John" liked to attribute his success to the great Chicago fire in 1871, when he was 11. The fire swept through his father's lumber yards and the Coughlin family had to start over again from scratch.

"If it hadn't been for that fire," John Coughlin said a short time ago, "I would have been just another rich man's idle son. I might even have been sent to Yale."

Opened Turkish Bath
Young John became a leader among the urchins who were forced to find their own way in Chicago of the seventies, a hustling river town, red hot with saloons, gamblers and promoters. By 1885 he had saved some money, and with the aid of other members of the family, he opened a Turkish bath establishment on Madison street, where the Brevoort Hotel stands today.

John's place in Madison street soon became "The Bathhouse," where the horsemen and gamblers and men about town, who in those days drank their liquor standing up and drank it often.

John grew famous and fairly rich. He was a bathhouse keeper, and his nickname, obviously, dated from this era.

During this period, also, he came into closer contact with Michael McKenna, owner of "The Workingman's Exchange," where a half-gallon of beer and a free lunch sold for a nickel. When trade was dull, Michael would go out on Clark street and distribute dimes to stimulate business.

They Liked Common Folk
Both McKenna and Coughlin liked common folk and before long they found the common folk liking for them could be turned to political advantage. Coughlin's formula for political success was: "We stick to one idea—live and let live. We want our voters and then we count the votes. We don't make any deal which can kick back into the First Ward, and we don't take any chances. Chances don't pay in politics."

Off and on, since 1885, when he bought a filly by the name of My Queen, "The Bath" dabbled or plunged in horse racing, but he never met with much success. In 1928 his Roguish Eye had a good chance of winning the Belmont Futurity, but another horse ran off with the $97,000 prize money. Four years later, however, Roguish Eye finished in front of the field at Jefferson Park, New Orleans, and was retired to graze on Coughlin's farm in St. Charles, Ill., while the First Ward celebrated the owner's triumph.

Poetry a Sideline
Poetry was another sideline of the veteran alderman. In 1900, May De Sousa, daughter of a detective sergeant, made her debut at the Chicago Opera House by singing "Dear Midnight of Love," the romantic words of which came from the pen of "Bathhouse John," the perennial bachelor. Old timers remember the chorus, later sung by May De Sousa in London and New York, and in vaudeville at points west. It runs:

Dear midnight of love, why did you meet?
Dear midnight of love, your face is so sweet.
Pure as the angels above, surely again we shall speak.
Loving only as the doves, dear midnight of love.

Carler H. Harrison, five times Mayor of Chicago and now collector of internal revenue in this district, said today: "I knew The Bathhouse since 1897. I admired his great native ability and kindness. Given different surroundings, he might have been a great man. As to his poetry? Ah, speak nothing but good of the dead."

First Lady Calls U. S. Fear-Ridden

Albany, N. Y., Nov. 11. (P)—Mrs. Roosevelt made an Armistice Day plea today to students of the New York State Teachers College to assume active responsibility in the world peace movement.

"We are letting ourselves be ridden by fears in this country," she said. "Fears of communism, fear of fascism. There is only one thing to fear in a democracy—that the people won't carry their own share of responsibility."

"When the people don't see that they elect representatives who will do their share, when they do not take active responsibility in their own Government, then there is danger that Democracy will not meet their needs and that people will turn to something else."

"I'll never trust another man—here I was simply mad about him, and then I discover he's only a substitute on the team!"

The Political Arena

Guffey Says G. O. P. Won on Big Promises
Missouri Farm Leader Asks Wallace Ouster

By the Associated Press

Senator Guffey (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, said in a statement last night that he was convinced Republicans obtained "scores of thousands of votes" in Pennsylvania, by promising WPA workers a minimum wage of $100 a month.

He added "many of their candidates promised old age pensions of $200 per month" and said it would be interesting to see how well the Republicans fulfill the pledges of their "ham and egg" campaign in view of Judge James' repeated pledges of economy, as well as tax reductions.

Judge Arthur James, Republican, was elected Governor. Guffey said he was leaving for a brief vacation in Texas, but "when I return, I shall have something very definite to say about the Pennsylvania situation."

Columbia, Mo., Nov. 11 (P)—William Hirth, president of the Missouri Farmers Association, said today President Roosevelt should ask for the resignation of Henry A. Wallace and appoint George N. Peek, farm implement manufacturer, Secretary of Agriculture.

In a statement commenting on Tuesday's election returns, Hirth, a Democrat, said, "a practical farm bill would not have the sympathy of the 'great idealists' from Iowa who believe in shot-in-the-arm methods."

Akron, Ohio, Nov. 11 (P)—Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), Missouri, addressing the Ohio Chamber of Commerce on the "Evils of Bureaucracy," urged a reorganization of Federal bureaus "in the interest of economy and efficiency."

"I don't mean the kind of reorganization set up in the bill we defeated," he said. Clark declared "job holders never let go—some of the bureaus maintain their own lobby in an attempt to increase their appropriations and jurisdiction, in direct violation of Federal statutes."

Gov. Martin L. Davey said that "unless the Democrats wake up and quit listening to radicals and nuts, the Democratic nomination for President in 1940 won't be worth much."

Seattle, Nov. 10. (P)—Holding a lead of 605 votes with only four small precincts unreported, Representative Knute Hill, (D), was the apparent winner today of Washington's fourth district Congressional contest. The official count and checking absentee ballots were awaited. In 469 of the district's 473 precincts, Hill received 37,496 votes to 36,885 for Frank Miller, Yakima Republican, who held a lead most of yesterday.

Republican forces in Congress came through Tuesday's election without the loss of a seat. Veteran officials at the capitol said yesterday, as they were able to determine, the record was unique for a major party.

Republicans took eight seats from Democrats in the Senate. In the House they won 72 from Democrats, 5 from Progressives, and 4 from Farmer-Laborites.

Of 25 former Representatives and Senators who tried comebacks, 14 succeeded. They were former Senator W. Warren Barbour (Republican), of New Jersey and the following onetime House members:

William W. Blackney (Republican), of Michigan; Chester C. Bolton (Republican), of Ohio; Colgate W. Darden (Democrat), of Virginia; George P. Darrow (Republican), of Pennsylvania; Butler B. Hare (Democrat), of South Carolina; William E. Hess (Republican), of Ohio; Noble W. Johnson (Republican), of Indiana; Clarence J. McLeod (Republican), of Michigan; Vito Marcantonio (Republican), of New York; Charles F. Risk (Republican), of Rhode Island; John C. Shafer (Republican), of Wisconsin; Arthur B. Jenks (Republican), of New Hampshire; and William A. Pittenger (Republican), of Minnesota.

Nazi Embassy Picketed by Remote Control

500-Foot Rule Obeyed
Kite-Flying Banned
March at Scott Circle

Confronted with the District embassy picketing law and police regulations against kite-flying, nearly 100 members of the Washington League for Peace and Democracy yesterday laid siege to the German Embassy by remote control.

The picketers, forbidden by recent act of Congress to demonstrate within 500 feet of a foreign chancery, were advised at the last minute that their strategy of flying kites with anti-Fascist slogans over the Nazi embassy would, in the language of a police regulation adopted in 1892, make them liable to a fine up to $10 "for each and every offense."

Besides informing the demonstrators of the illegality of setting up or flying "any kite, fire balloon or parachute in or upon or over" any space within "the cities of Washington or Georgetown," police officials told league executives their projected aerial protest against Fascism might also make them subject to prosecution under the antipicketing statute.

Undismayed by these difficulties, the picketers took up their station at the corner of Scott circle and Massachusetts avenue northwest, on the far side of a carefully drawn chalk line on the sidewalk, marking a distance of exactly 500 feet from the German Embassy at 1439 Massachusetts avenue northwest.

Five hundred and six feet from the headquarters of Reich's representative in America, a white-haired man stood with a sign reading, "Over 500 feet from the German Embassy, we protest on Armistice Day the Fascist threat to Democracy."

Between the chalk line and edge of Scott Circle picketers marched and counter-marched on the sidewalk in flattened oval formation, shouldering placards and, in several instances, the kites which had been devised for more dramatic presentation of anti-Nazi sentiment.

The demonstrators, men and women of all ages, filed back and forth chanting in unison such slogans as "Resist Fascist Terror," "Boycott German Goods," "Lift the Arms Embargo," "No More Munichs," and "Appease Fascism? Why Not Tickle Tigers?"

Several hundred Armistice Day strollers and many motorists witnessed some portion of the 60-minute demonstration. Two dozen police stood by.

While their colleagues marched, Harry C. Lamberth, chairman of the league's Washington branch, and Eleanor Fowler, executive secretary, presented at the German Embassy a statement registering emphatic protest at the brutal aggressions of your government against peaceful, democratic peoples in Spain and Czechoslovakia and its disregard to the Japanese invaders of China.

"We are also here as free American citizens," the manifesto continued, "to protest the inhumanity of your government to helpless minorities within Germany, particularly the Jewish people and those heroic Germans who continue to resist the barbarities of the present regime."

The statement concluded, "We remind you that there are millions of Germans of good will who feel exactly as we do. It is unnecessary to ask you to convey our sympathy and support to them. We do ask you to remind your government of the solidarity that exists between all democratic, peace-loving peoples."

Roosevelt Says Polls Confirmed His Predictions

President Roosevelt considers himself a pretty good election forecaster, he said yesterday, revealing for the first time his predictions made in advance of the Tuesday voting.

He told his press conference the New York governorship race had gone just about as he expected. Gov. Herbert Lehman, Democrat, was re-elected by only 67,330 votes. Mr. Roosevelt said he had expected a Democratic loss of seven Senate seats, while the actual loss was eight, but he was unable to remember, he said, which race upset his calculations.

been in the past neglected by the A. F. L., but we are no less keenly aware that the perpetuation of the division of labor through the existence of two national competitive labor bodies would prove ruinous to the well-being of the workers as well as to the general community."

Lewis Seems Undisturbed

Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 11 (P)—John L. Lewis, completed preliminary organization of C. I. O.'s first constitutional convention today, apparently undisturbed by the refusal of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union to join in a permanent C. I. O.

Lewis is expected to declare at the convention that he will return to a peace conference table if the A. F. L. will moderate its policy to carry on the war until the C. I. O. capitulates.

Surrounded by the presidents of C. I. O. unions, Lewis put his constitution committee machinery into operation today, and discussed with them matters of policy and agenda for next week's session.

He named Thomas M. Kennedy, lieutenant governor of Pennsylvania, as chairman of a committee to draft and present a constitution for a permanent C. I. O. Kennedy is secretary-treasurer of Lewis' United Mine Workers Union.

Van A. Bittner, of Chicago, member of the C. I. O.'s field staff in the 1937 steel strike, will head the resolutions committee.

Personal Errors Blamed in Half Of Air Accidents

The Civil Aeronautics Authority announced yesterday that "personal errors" caused 53.52 per cent of all accidents in private flying during the first six months of the current year.

Engine failures accounted for 15.59 per cent of the accidents; airplane failures, 10.33 per cent; weather, 7.92 per cent; darkness, 0.19 per cent; airport, 8.2 per cent; other causes, 3.94 per cent, and undetermined, 1.01 per cent.

During the six-month period, 706,238 miles were flown for each fatal accident, and 941,651 for each passenger fatality. There were 626,610 miles to each fatal accident and 1,128,635 miles to each passenger fatality in the corresponding period last year.

Private flying includes all civil flying exclusive of that by scheduled airlines.

expense of another group," Brown said. Earlier, Wallace's assistant had suggested the Government might sell its surplus store of more than 9,000,000 bales of Government loan cotton "at a comparatively cheap rate for a mattress program."

He said legislation would be required to make the loan cotton available. "I do not believe," he told the group, "the people will tolerate the paradox of huge surpluses and great numbers of the needy and unemployed. Those who believe in the democratic system, whether in or out of Government service, will not be serving that system unless we bend every effort toward bridging the gap between the capacity to produce and the capacity to consume."

D. W. Watkins, Clemson, S. C., extension director, declared the Government's huge store of loan cotton demonstrated something had to be done. He said the two-price plan, after all, was "only a theory" and the industry should not permit such a "bugaboo" to interfere with effective co-operation on utilization.

Legislation Asked
A cotton producer representative, Alexander Nunn, of the Progressive Farmer, Raleigh, N. C., proposed that loan cotton be turned over to farmers or groups of farmers who would organize mattress-making projects, keep some for themselves and pay the Government back in mattresses that could be distributed for relief. He declared the plan could be so handled as not to interfere with the retail business, and predicted from 2,000 to 3,000,000 bales "thus could be used."

Schwab, and other mattress manufacturers, proposed Federal legislation to raise the standard of materials used in mattresses, pointing out that many States had sanitary regulations which were not binding because of the interstate character of the product. Manufacturers' spokesmen pointed out that use of cotton in mattresses has decreased, and liners and second-hand material is often substituted. They said loan cotton would have to be sold at an exceptionally low price before it could be used generally in mattresses.

Wallace, Tapp Speak
Assistant AAA Administrator Tapp and Secretary Wallace also addressed the conference. Tapp said there is a broad field for relief use of cotton mattresses, and old bedding in use by all types of consumers indicates a need for expansion of the whole mattress industry.

Wallace briefly thanked the group for its "frank and free expression of opinion" and for co-operative efforts.

New President Shifts Turkish Cabinet Posts

Drop Foreign Minister Inonu, 58, Takes Over Was Premier 13 Years

Ankara, Turkey, Nov. 11.—Turkey's veteran foreign minister, Tevfik Rustu Aras, was dropped tonight when Gen. Ismet Inonu took office as President of Turkey, pledged to carry out the work of his friend, the late Kemal Ataturk.

Premier Djelal Bayar quickly formed a new cabinet at Inonu's behest.

The reshuffle eliminated Aras, who for 13 years has guided Turkish foreign policy during the period which saw Turkey emerge from the ruins of the Ottoman Empire to become a modern power.

Cabinet Little Changed

Minister of Justice Sukru Saroglu succeeded him. Other cabinet posts were left unchanged except the home ministry where Suhr Kaya was succeeded by former Minister of Public Health Refik Saydam to serve under Inonu.

The caretaker government came as no novelty to doughty Inonu, 58 and hard of hearing, who was premier for 13 of the 15 years Ataturk ruled until his death yesterday.

He succeeded to the presidency by vote of the National Assembly at a time when the future of Turkey is clouded by the Balkan aims of Germany.

Inonu did not mention foreign policy in his inaugural speech but as chief spokesman for Ataturk in the signing of an accord with Russia, a traditional enemy of the former Ottoman empire, he was considered certain to preserve Turkey's friendships with the Soviet Union and Great Britain.

The Turkish army and its glorious army were in their efforts to further peace and progress, the new President declared to the wild acclaim of the assembly after a 10-gun salute.

Observers expressed belief that Turkey, strategically situated at the narrow straits of the Black Sea, had no alternative except friendship for Britain and Russia in view of Germany's eastward drive.

The unsmiling President's first act was to change Premier Djelal Bayar with formation of a new government after accepting the formal resignation of the premier's old cabinet.

Inonu once was described by Ataturk as "my conscience—he is always on the alert and finds out what is wrong and criticizes me."

He took the name of Inonu by decree in 1934 to commemorate the battlefield where Turks crushed a Greek army in the Anatolian campaign in 1921. As Ismet Pasha until then, he had earned fame as a Turkish soldier and diplomat.

As Inonu assumed office, Ataturk's body lay in state in the marble throne room of Dolma Bagiche Palace where courtiers and envoys bent knee to Sultan Abdul Hamid.

The date of the funeral, at which Inonu himself was expected to lead the observances, had not yet been set.

U. S. Wires Sympathy

President Roosevelt yesterday telegraphed Abdul Malik Renda, Provisional President of Turkey: "I have learned with sincere sorrow of the death of His Excellency Kemal Ataturk, the President of the Turkish Republic, whose devotion to his country won him the respect of the entire world. The American people join with me in an expression of deepest sympathy in the passing of His Excellency."

Secretary Hull telegraphed his sympathy to Dr. Tevfik Rustu Aras, Turkish foreign minister. He characterized Ataturk as "a great leader and a distinguished statesman who did so much in cementing the true friendship which exists between our countries."

Garment Workers Urge U. S. Protest On Nazi 'Terror'

President Roosevelt was urged yesterday by the general executive board of the International Ladies Garment Workers union to protest against the terrorizing of the Jewish population in Germany "in terms so unmistakable that even the perpetrators of these atrocities will realize they have placed themselves by their barbarities beyond the pale of civilization."

A similar appeal was cabled to the International Federation of Trades Unions in Paris, urging the unionists bring pressure upon their various governments to join in condemnation of the Nazi persecutions.

President Roosevelt declined to comment when asked at his press conference about the recent anti-Jewish outbreak in Germany and Great Britain's new policy in Palestine. The President referred the question to the State Department, adding that he had not yet read the British white paper on Palestine.

Row With Mexico On Land Seizures Reported Settled

Mexico City, Nov. 11 (U.P.)—The 27-year-old dispute between the United States and Mexico over expropriation of American-owned agrarian properties south of the Rio Grande was reported settled today.

It was said unofficially that an agreement had been reached in a final conference between Eduardo Hay, foreign minister, and American Ambassador Joseph Daniels today.

It was said publication of the texts of notes between the two countries in regard to the settlement had been arranged for Saturday afternoon.

News of the settlement was welcomed in some quarters here as possibly a prelude to eventual settlement of the controversy over expropriation of American and other foreign-owned oil properties valued by the companies at some $400,000,000.

Mother Cabrini To Be Beatified Tomorrow

cles attributed to her intercession, to begin immediately.

The request was granted, the apostolic delegate explained, because of the Holy See's great interest in the lives of Americans whose recognition by the church would bring great satisfaction to the numerous Catholics of the United States. Mother Cabrini's "cause" also was given a preferred position on the agenda of the ecclesiastical commission under direction of the Sacred Congregation of Rites, he added, and the process was "one of the most rapid" in the history of the church.

Archbishop Cieslinski will celebrate mass tomorrow at her tomb in the chapel of the Mother Cabrini Memorial High School, New York City, immediately after the nun has been officially declared blessed in Rome.

A prominent part in the ceremonies at St. Peter's will be taken by George Cardinal Mundelein, Archbishop of Chicago, in whose diocese Mother Cabrini died.

On a special tribune in the basilica will be Peter Smith, 17-year-old New Yorker, and a Seattle nun who owe their lives, according to investigators of Mother Cabrini's claims to veneration, to her intervention.

As a baby, Peter Smith is reported to have been blinded and brought near death when a nurse accidentally dropped a 50 per cent solution of silver nitrate into his eyes, instead of the prescribed 1 per cent. Restoration of the child's sight the day after the accident, following prayers for Mother Cabrini's intercession, has been accepted by the church as an authenticated miracle.

The nun had undergone four major operations and is said to have been considered by physicians as doomed to a slow and painful death. Her recourse to the intercession of Mother Cabrini, subsequent recovery of the child's sight the day after the accident, following prayers for Mother Cabrini's intercession, has been accepted by the church as an authenticated miracle.

Beatification will permit veneration of Mother Cabrini in Chicago and other cities closely associated with her work. Canonization, the elevation to sainthood, is a further process and, if completed in the case of Mother Cabrini, would command her veneration everywhere.

The Congregation Rites must accept proof of two more miracles worked through her intercession before she can be canonized, the apostolic delegate pointed out.

Born at Lodi in 1850, Mother Cabrini was licensed as a teacher at the age of 30 and founded a religious group called the Missionary Sisters of the Sacred Heart.

Pope Leo XIII granted her permission to carry her work to foreign countries, she came to New York City and established a school and orphanage for Italian children.

Italian Ambassador Says 'Good-by'

Oakland, Calif., Nov. 11 (U.P.)—A longshoreman was arrested today for questioning concerning the explosion which disabled the German freighter Vancouver in the Oakland estuary November 3.

Police Officer H. A. Hartke said the man, booked as Herbert Huntsman, 58, was taken into custody at the pier where the vessel was being unloaded.

Albert Von Stritzky, fourth officer of the vessel which was beached after the explosion tore open the hull and injured five seamen, told police Huntsman had made "suspicious" remarks.

Rebels Kill 700, Capture 2,000 in 48-Hour Battle

Hendaye, France, Nov. 11 (U.P.)—Spanish insurgents today attacked under scores of bombing planes along the entire Ebro and Segre River fronts in an attempt to crush remaining Loyalist resistance on the west banks of the two rivers.

After a 48-hour battle which cost the Loyalists at least 700 casualties and 2,000 prisoners, the Loyalists tonight held a thin line along the Segre west bank in the face of insurgent attacks to clear the Fraga-Rivera road.

Farther south on the Ebro front, Franco directed operations against the last triangle of the Ebro area where Loyalists were being forced back across the river after holding out since July.

Czechs Ordered To Unite Parties In Fascist Swing

Prague (Saturday), Nov. 12 (U.P.)—Premier Gen. Jan Syrovky has delivered an ultimatum to leaders of the political parties that they must unite into a single party by noon today, according to authoritative reports.

The premier will dissolve the parties if they fail to comply.

Yugoslav Senator Assassinated

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Nov. 11 (U.P.)—Senator Hadzhi Ristic Spira, president of the state tobacco purchasing monopoly for many years and a leading politician of the Stoyadinovitch Party, was shot and killed in the market square at Skopje today by a tobacco grower named Josic who then committed suicide.

Japanese Take Yochow, Key City, In Pincer Drive

Shanghai (Saturday), Nov. 12 (U.P.)—The first phase of the Japanese campaign to crush Gen. Chiang's army in the Han Yang triangle of Hunan Province ended today when the Japanese northern army occupied the key city of Yochow, on Lake Tung Ting, about 125 miles south of the captured Hankow tri-city area.

Simultaneously, Japanese gunboats on the Yangtze River, smashed through Chinese barricades at the entrance to the lake and began clearing out Chinese craft.

Capture of Yochow was hailed as a major victory since the city, a large station on the Hankow-Canton Railway, long has been considered by Chinese as the key to Hunan.

Pier Worker Held In Blast on Nazi Ship Vancouver

Oakland, Calif., Nov. 11 (U.P.)—A longshoreman was arrested today for questioning concerning the explosion which disabled the German freighter Vancouver in the Oakland estuary November 3.

Police Officer H. A. Hartke said the man, booked as Herbert Huntsman, 58, was taken into custody at the pier where the vessel was being unloaded.

Albert Von Stritzky, fourth officer of the vessel which was beached after the explosion tore open the hull and injured five seamen, told police Huntsman had made "suspicious" remarks.

Rebels Kill 700, Capture 2,000 in 48-Hour Battle

Hendaye, France, Nov. 11 (U.P.)—Spanish insurgents today attacked under scores of bombing planes along the entire Ebro and Segre River fronts in an attempt to crush remaining Loyalist resistance on the west banks of the two rivers.

After a 48-hour battle which cost the Loyalists at least 700 casualties and 2,000 prisoners, the Loyalists tonight held a thin line along the Segre west bank in the face of insurgent attacks to clear the Fraga-Rivera road.

Farther south on the Ebro front, Franco directed operations against the last triangle of the Ebro area where Loyalists were being forced back across the river after holding out since July.

Czechs Ordered To Unite Parties In Fascist Swing

Prague (Saturday), Nov. 12 (U.P.)—Premier Gen. Jan Syrovky has delivered an ultimatum to leaders of the political parties that they must unite into a single party by noon today, according to authoritative reports.

The premier will dissolve the parties if they fail to comply.

Yugoslav Senator Assassinated

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Nov. 11 (U.P.)—Senator Hadzhi Ristic Spira, president of the state tobacco purchasing monopoly for many years and a leading politician of the Stoyadinovitch Party, was shot and killed in the market square at Skopje today by a tobacco grower named Josic who then committed suicide.

Row With Mexico On Land Seizures Reported Settled

Mexico City, Nov. 11 (U.P.)—The 27-year-old dispute between the United States and Mexico over expropriation of American-owned agrarian properties south of the Rio Grande was reported settled today.

It was said unofficially that an agreement had been reached in a final conference between Eduardo Hay, foreign minister, and American Ambassador Joseph Daniels today.

It was said publication of the texts of notes between the two countries in regard to the settlement had been arranged for Saturday afternoon.

News of the settlement was welcomed in some quarters here as possibly a prelude to eventual settlement of the controversy over expropriation of American and other foreign-owned oil properties valued by the companies at some $400,000,000.

Soviet Tries 'Wreckers' of Clothing Sales

Distribution Blocked Money Can't Buy Suits Speculators Thrive

Moscow, Nov. 11.—Soviet justice again is beginning to bring to account alleged wreckers and incompetents, particularly those suspected of frustrating the worker's efforts to get something for his money.

Five employees of Moscow's Universal Store No. 1 went on trial today accused of obstructing the distribution of goods to consumers.

They were charged with concealing suits, overcoats and other merchandise in a cellar—selling the goods to themselves or to friends while the purchasing public was told there was nothing to be had.

Workers Getting Tired

The Soviet worker apparently is getting tired of running around with money in his pocket to buy a woolen suit which has not arrived or a cotton shirt which is not there.

Discussion of the situation in Russian newspapers indicates the collective farms grow food enough for everyone and that wool and cotton enough to clothe the population are produced in the U. S. S. R.

Between producer and consumer, however, there are obstacles as the result of imperfect organization and alleged wrecking, both of which Soviet officials are trying to erase.

Earn $45 a Month

The average worker in Soviet Russia receives about 230 rubles (about $45), a month but earnings money is only half the battle. Spending it is what gives the worker his worst headaches.

Pravda, the official organ of the Communist Party recently described an "intolerable situation" in Moscow, Moscow's finest and largest department store. It declared the choicest goods regularly were being bought by employees of the store or sold to speculators before the public had a chance to see them.

Of a shipment of 100 bicycles, for instance, Pravda said not one reached the general public. All were snapped up by Moscow employees or by speculators who "knew the store" and bought one or two to sell outside at a profit.

Can't Find a Suit

The worker who spent 400 rubles for a suit in 1935 and 666 rubles for the same grade of clothes in 1937 could have gone from shop to shop without finding any suit at all last month.

There was some light woolen suiting from Spain but the price was 400 rubles a meter (about 39 inches). Since it takes more than three meters to make a suit, the cloth alone would cost about 1,300 rubles (about $250 at the official rate), with lining, buttons and tailoring still to buy. This would mean sinking five months' pay in one suit for the average worker.

Men's shoes last month were scarce in Moscow shops, so also were cotton shirts.

Chilean Rivals Raising Armies In Election Row

Santiago, Chile, Nov. 11 (U.P.)—Rival Chilean political factions were reported tonight to be raising armed forces to back the claims of their presidential candidates, with the appearance of military conservatives disputing the results of the election held October 25.

Unofficial returns indicated Pedro Aguirre Corda, backed by a coalition of the democratic and Communist, had defeated the conservative government candidate, Finance Minister Gustavo Ross, by the narrow margin of 213,116 to 213,815.

The government conceded Ross' defeat, and Aguirre Corda made public addresses outlining his program. But later it developed the rightists hoped the court of claims, the republic's highest authority on elections, would reverse the verdict of the unofficial returns.

5 Mexican States Lightless as 10,000 Men Strike

Mexico City, Nov. 11 (U.P.)—Five Mexican states were without power and light service today because of a strike by an estimated 10,000 workers in a wage dispute with the American-controlled Electric Bond & Share Co.

The strike was called last midnight in Guanajuato, Michoacan, Jalisco, San Luis Potosi and Queretaro states.

Army Chiefs of Two Nations at Ease

Paris, Nov. 11.—A friendly, informal meeting with the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester today brought the Duke of Windsor back into the British royal family circle with the social acceptance of his American wife.

The Gloucesters spent Armistice Day with the self-exiled former King Edward VIII and the wife for whom he abdicated.

When the two couples left their hotel for an afternoon drive they were cheered by a sidewalk crowd.

"My goodness, I never expected this," said the Duchess of Windsor.

"Neither did I," replied the Duchess of Gloucester. "But it's rather fun, isn't it?"

The meeting of Edward and his younger brother was expected as British circles to be followed by successive receptions of the Windsors by other members of the royal family, eventually permitting them to return to England.

Friends of the Windsors believed the Gloucesters had brought an invitation for Edward and his wife to spend Christmas with the royal family in London.

Believed to be emissaries of King George, the Gloucesters greeted the Windsors behind shut doors of a suite in Hotel Meurice in the first reunion of the brothers since Edward left England after his abdication December 10, 1936.

A spokesman said the two men shook hands and smiled with "extreme warmth and affection." The two duchesses were described as being "very gracious to each other."

After lunch of oysters on the half shell, Russian fish pie, steak, potatoes, fresh fruit and white Alsatian wine in the Gloucesters' suite, the two couples went for their drive, chatting happily together.

With the two dukes in one car and the duchesses in another, they drove to the new house being prepared for the Windsors, stopped for a moment without entering, then went to the home of Baron Eugene Rothchild and his American wife, the former Kitty Spotswood, for tea.

The Gloucesters, returning home from a visit to East Africa, flew to Paris from Marseilles today. Originally they had intended to continue on to London tonight, but decided to stay overnight in Hotel Meurice rooms directly below the Windsors' suite.

Arrangements for the visit were supervised by the British embassy.

Bazaar Date Set

The turkey dinner and bazaar of St. Columba's Church will be held Wednesday and Thursday at the Parish Hall, Forty-second and Albee streets northward, it was announced last night. Mrs. Elsie M. LeMoine is general chairman.

President Sees Gen. Pershing, Col. Batista

3 Meet at White House Cuba Is Discussed General Off to Texas

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt, Gen. John J. Pershing and Col. Fulgencio Batista—three men with widely varying backgrounds, and experience—met briefly at the White House yesterday afternoon and exchanged greetings.

Gen. Pershing arrived at the Executive Mansion to pay his respects to the President, just as the Cuban army leader was concluding a half-hour chat with Mr. Roosevelt on Cuba's social and economic problems.

Pershing was saying goodbye in advance of his departure Sunday for San Antonio, Tex., where he served as a fledgling officer a half century ago. Later he will go to Tucson, Ariz., to spend the winter.

Pershing was a major during the Spanish-American War, which liberated Cuba, before Batista was born.

Reversing the usual role of a White House visit, President Roosevelt turned questioner and asked the Cuban visitor about conditions and improvements in Cuba. Batista rose to power in Cuba a few months after the President entered the White House.

Batista said later the President showed a keen knowledge of slum clearance, education and other social legislation in the island republic.

The President and Batista, the power behind the Cuban President, then turned to a discussion of Cuban-American and new world problems, talking generally about mutual protection, aid and development.

D. C. Churches Honor Dead Of World War

Mediation and Prayer
Dr. Hart Preaches
Says Christ Is Needed

Washington churchgoers yesterday assembled in the shadows of memorials to pay homage to those who died in the World War.

Mediation, with prayers and messages of hope for the future, centered at St. John's Episcopal, Concordia Lutheran and All Saints' Episcopal churches, with the latter congregation sponsoring a joint service of Chevy Chase Protestants.

Addressing the suburban audience, Dr. Oliver J. Hart, guest rector, voiced the conviction that "Jesus Christ—not statesmen—is the hope of the world, and although the world is at the crossroads, its power of choice is not lost."

Calls Christ Needed

"The most powerful, potent and effective means of promoting world peace is for you to throw your energy and influence behind the Church of Christ's world program," said the clergyman, chaplain of the First Division in the District of Columbia.

"While I personally believe," he continued, "that the working out of the details and the technique of world peace should be put in the hands of statesmen, they are utterly helpless unless the Church of Jesus Christ makes them the right kind of men."

"Unless we do just that," asserted Dr. Hart, "all the subtle, crafty statesmanship will not save the world."

Participating clergymen and congregations were the Rev. J. Luther Voff, Wesley Methodist; the Rev. Edward G. Clark, Baptist; the Rev. Edward G. Latch, Chevy Chase Methodist; and the Rev. Henry Teller Coker, rector of the host parish, who presided and gave the benediction.

Dr. Hart's Services

Earlier in the day, Dr. Hart conducted services in his church at Sixteenth and H streets northwest, with representatives of the Red Cross, the Overseas League, the National Council and other organizations attending. Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, commander of the District National Guard, headed the committee in charge of the program.

Dr. Florian W. Vurpillot, former pastor of the local French congregation, many members of which were present, assisted Dr. Hart in the service, which opened with a tolling of the bell at 10:55 a. m. As the ring halted, the clerics took their places in the chancel, and as the bell was tapped twice, the congregation observed a two-minute silence. Dr. Hart offered a prayer and Litany for the occasion.

At the same hour, Concordia Evangelical and Reformed Church, Twentieth and G streets northwest, marked the occasion with a service of meditation and prayer in the interest of world peace, held under the auspices of the religious work committee of the Young People's League. Dr. Charles Enders, pastor, presided.

First Congregational parishioners, many of whom attended the various Armistice Day services here, climaxed the day by participating in a Sunday school dinner in the parish hall at Tenth and G streets northwest.

Movies, magic and other forms of entertainment were featured on the program, arranged by Committees Donald E. Preston, Martin Schramm, Harry Whitton, Warren Burgess, Elisabeth Thompson and others. Dr. Howard Stone Anderson and Walter G. Borchers, pastor and assistant respectively, and their wives and families were special guests.

Inarticulateness In U. S. Blamed On Lack of Latin

The most noticeable thing about the average American is his inability to "stand up and express a few thoughts," Miss Mildred Dean, supervisor of Latin in Washington schools and teacher at Roosevelt High, yesterday told the New Jersey State Teachers' Association at Atlantic City.

The trouble, she declared, is lack of proper interest in Latin. The cure for those who wish to express themselves clearly and emphatically is to study the language which is not nearly so dead as many people believe, she concluded.

College Reunion Set for Tonight

Alumni of Northampton Commercial College, who are employees of the Federal Government, will hold their second reunion dinner this evening at Wardman Park Hotel.

The guest of honor will be John Calhoun Pickett, president of the college. Arrangements are in charge of Linus Goyette, of the Farm Credit Administration, who will conduct the business meeting following the dinner. Miss Lucille E. Fine, of the Railroad Retirement Board; Mrs. Marion E. Libby, General Accounting Office; Miss Mildred E. Streeter, Labor Department; and Miss Ramona J. Vincent, Interior Department.

5 Jurors Chosen For Irwin Trial

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—The trial of Robert Irwin, 25-year-old sculptor accused of the Beckman Hill Easter slayings in 1937 of Veronica Gedeon, photographer's model, her mother and a roomer at their home, was in recess today following selection of five jurors. The trial will be resumed Monday.

'Picked' On by Wife, Husband Asks Divorce

San Jose, Calif., Nov. 11 (AP).—The "dignified, unruffled calm" of Lawrence Lund in the face of domestic criticism only served to infuriate his wife, he charged today in asking a divorce.

He said he refused to argue and because of this Mrs. Lucie Lund flew into violent rages and made married life intolerable.

They were married in 1926 and separated last June. He charged she "picked" on him over trivial domestic matters.

'Injured in Action' as Nation Celebrates Armistice Day

Arthur Stanley, swathed here and there in bandages, is cheered by his brother, Wilbur. Arthur, a seventh-grade pupil at Montgomery Hills Junior High, was so impressed by the sham battle at Sligo Park Thursday night that he decided to re-enact the conflict. He and Wilbur visited the battle scene yesterday in search of ammunition and found a flare which served as a "grenade" for Arthur, who hurled it at the "enemy." The "grenade" rolled into a bonfire and exploded, with the above results.

Armistice Day Speakers Flay 'Munich Peace'

Armistice

Calif., sounded the same belief in strength.

"To be respected is the first step to peace in a dangerous world," he declared, deploring the fact that forces of brutality and might are rising again.

Jewish War Veterans, in a nationwide broadcast at 3:30 p. m., heard Col. William R. Arnold, chief of chaplains, United States Army, declare:

"Genuine religion is not at odds with a war against an unjust aggressor who, with pride of power and greed for wealth, scorns or denies the rights of others. Peace is not a gift. It's a dividend of sacrifices and suffering."

National Commander I. S. Worth, of the Jewish veterans, asserted that every American "must become a trustee of liberty, because forces are marching throughout the world with drawn and penetrating swords, smearing mankind and waging a campaign which, if successful, will destroy our American ideals and institutions."

"Carry the Torch"

"You veterans who were willing to give all that democracy might be saved must stand now, as never before, to carry the torch and see that it flames brightly," he declared.

Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, administrator of veterans' affairs, speaking at Arlington, declared that while "the vision of a free world of men and women, living side by side in peace, has not been realized, it will not die so long as men are willing to die for it." He scored intolerance and called for a continuing "real American" attitude, the thoughts and beliefs of others.

Gen. John J. Pershing, who commanded the Unknown Soldier and his thousands of buddies, told the Nation in an Armistice Day message that the world situation demands "vigorous and immediate action" lest the United States encounter "the recent experience of England and France."

Polish Ambassador Count Jerzy Potocki declared in a radio speech that his country—which was born on the first Armistice Day and as a result of the World War—stands itself 20 years later with no intention of being swung into the camp of either the dictators or the liberal democracies. The Polish government, he declared, must continue to be such as meets Poland's needs as a nation that still is strengthening and consolidating itself.

"Rose of No Man's Land"

In joint services at the Washington Cathedral, the Disabled American Veterans and various women's organizations of the World War paid tribute to nurses and other women who contributed their services during the conflict.

Owen A. Galvin, National Commander, told the women that "to us whom you served each one of you is still 'young and beautiful—the rose of No Man's Land.'"

Commander Galvin urged preparedness as "insurance against war."

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and the wives of several of the Cabinet officers attended services before the tomb of the war President. The services were sponsored by the Woodrow Wilson Armistice Day Committee of the District of Columbia, of which Mrs. Kate Trenchard is chairman.

A procession of wreath bearers visited the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier throughout the day, beginning with the History Club of Western High School at 8:45 a. m. and ending with the Legion Auxiliary of Alexandria at 3:45 p. m.

Among them was a committee representing the seven officially authorized welfare organizations of the World War. In a speech following the floral tribute, Maj. George Marshall, divisional commander of the Salvation Army in Maryland, paid homage to "The Seven" groups.

Division veterans placed wreaths on tombs of commanders buried in Arlington and staged several reunions.

Special Armistice Day services were held in numerous churches. Among them was a union "hour of quiet" at the Concordia Lutheran Evangelical Church, with Dr. John Edwards, Dr. J. Harvey Dunham, and the Rev. Charles Enders in charge.

President Roosevelt's church, St. Thomas, will have special services Sunday, with Gen. Hines delivering the sermon at 11 a. m. The Greeks of Washington also will hold their Armistice Day services Sunday under auspices of the St. Sophia Greek Orthodox Church, of which the Rev. Alimilanos Laloussis is rector. Lieut. Col. Alfred C. Oliver will speak at 12:15 p. m. and services at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier will follow at 1:30 p. m.

Col. Edward Goring Bliss, who was director of general transports tion with the A. E. F., was speaker at the Armistice Day celebration staged last night by the Boys' Club of Goodwill Industries. He related some of his experiences in general headquarters in France on the night the armistice was signed.

In Europe, the "armistice of Munich" overshadowed that signed 20 years ago, and Germany, the enemy then, held a dominant position among the nations celebrating now.

King George VI, in London, visited the cenotaph in Whitehall and placed a wreath of tribute to Britain's World War dead. Westminster's Bishop Paul de LaBilliere prayed for "the Jewish people in their troubles." British resentment at the upsurge of anti-Semitism in Germany impeded the eager plans of the Chamberlain government to carry forward the "peace of Munich."

Two large Armistice Day balls closed the main day of celebration in Washington. With President and Mrs. Roosevelt heading their list of sponsors, the Veterans of Foreign Wars danced at the Willard Hotel. Secretary of War and Mrs. Woodring, many Army and Navy officials, and members of the Washington Diplomatic Corps were among their guests.

United States Treasury Post. No. 35, of the American Legion, sponsored the second ball at the National Press Club. A floor show was staged under the direction of "Happy" Walker.

The Second, Third and Fifth divisions staged a get-together at Dick's Grill at 7:30 p. m. before attending the dances.

Col. Batista's Visit

Until he landed at Miami the other day, Col. Fulgencio Batista, chief of the Cuban army and the man behind the throne in the Cuban government, had never been outside his native land.

It is a high compliment to the United States, therefore, that his first trip abroad should have been to this country. And coming at this particular juncture in world affairs, Col. Batista's visit has a special significance.

Developments in Europe and Asia during the last few months have tended to emphasize the community of interest that exists among the nations of this hemisphere. But between no two countries are the relations so intimate as they are between the United States and Cuba. Bound by sentiments arising out of America's aid in the achievement of Cuban independence and by close economic ties, both nations, together with the other nations of the New World, face the common necessity of securing themselves against possible attack from the outside.

This subject will undoubtedly play a significant part in the discussions that are soon to open at the Lima conference. Col. Batista's visit to Washington may give American military and naval officials a chance to discuss with him the possibility of harmonizing the defense measures of the two republics. It will also provide an opportunity to consider economic problems of interest to Cuba and the United States.

At the same time Washington welcomes Col. Batista as a colorful and significant New World personality under whose leadership Cuba has made considerable progress.

Indefensible Tactics

The recently organized Citizens Committee for Medical Freedom is asking contributors to the Community Chest to attach stickers to their pledges stating that they "will become effective when the Community Chest undertakes to make hospitalization payments through the hospitalization fund or otherwise only to hospitals which the Community Chest and the Group Health Association agree are not discriminating against that association or its members."

The controversy between the Group Health Association and the District Medical Society raises definite issues which should be discussed and settled in a decent and orderly manner. It is, however, an utterly indefensible, non-social proceeding to try to bring pressure to bear upon the local medical association at the expense of the sick and destitute for whom hospital facilities are at best extremely inadequate. The ill-advised character of the movement is so evident that it is likely to injure rather than assist the group which is identified with the co-operative health organization. Fortunately, the responsible officials of the GHA are aware to the danger and have vigorously criticized those who have launched the sticker campaign.

If movements of this kind were to be given public support, they would no doubt soon become a regular accompaniment of Community Chest drives. Groups that have purposes of their own to serve cannot be allowed to divert funds from useful and tested agencies without danger of breaking down the Community Chest organization.

In the present instance, it is hoped that the people of Washington will recognize the injustice of attempting to make the sick and needy parties to a conflict which does not concern them and which cannot be settled satisfactorily by the employment of such illegitimate methods.

The Dionnes Again

By a gallant counterassault the Dionne quintuplets yesterday recaptured their own little sector of the headlines, which for a good many weeks past has been variously occupied by European statesmen, Japanese conquerors, Martian landing parties and divers politicians.

On an improvised operating table in the Dafeo Hospital at Callander, the young Dionnes on Wednesday parted company forever with five sets of tonsils and as many sets of adenoids. The fact that the quintuplets have since their birth been raised, so to speak, "by hand" (as was said of little Pip, you remember) has not prevented them from developing what Dr. Dafeo described as "chronic toxic conditions" which, if left unremedied might bring "disastrous results."

Here would seem to be another proof that in spite of all their celebrity, the Dionnes are, after all, just normal children. Nowadays, the child who does not have to be set asunder, somewhat expensively, from his adenoids and tonsils is something of a prodigy. And perhaps this is one occasion when the Dionnes, mere et pere, are just as satisfied that it is the Dominion of Canada which is standing the gaff.

So far as pediatrics and surgery are concerned the Dionne tonsillectomies appear to have been pretty routine stuff. But this does not mean that they do not have a profound scientific interest, albeit it is mainly rhetorical and philological. For instance, there is a small but vigorous school of opinion which holds that a reasonable pair of adenoids is absolutely essential to the proper pronunciation of the French "n." But that would seem more important for those who address the Dionnes than for this predestined five-pointed star itself.

Horror In The Reich

For nearly 25 years horror has been the commonplace of European life. But probably not since the evening of August 24, 1572, and the bloody days and nights that followed, had the European world seen anything quite comparable to what took place Thursday throughout Greater Germany.

It is plain that, like the St. Bartholomew's Day massacre, the recent ferocious reprisals against the German Jews were officially sponsored. But there is at least one respect in which the analogy fails to hold, and which makes the older instance, at the memory of which so many subsequent generations have shuddered, seem the less frightful of the two.

In the case of Catherine de Medici and her accomplices the official intention seems to have comprehended only the assassination of a few Huguenot leaders. But once turned loose upon such work, a mob inflamed by fanaticism, vengeance, and all the passions of religious civil war could not be leashed until it became satiated with its own butchery.

But what happened the other day in Germany and Austria was no case of mob madness. Of this hardly more proof is needed than the fact that the violence ceased as soon as the signal to cease was given officially by Dr. Goebbels. The wholesale bombings, burnings and beatings were the work of organized and even uniformed bodies. The German people, as such, were far from having any hand in them. Indeed, Thursday's censored news dispatches indicate on the part of the populace an attitude of passive disapproval and even of furtive compassion for the victims.

Here then is something altogether opposite to anarchy, to the capricious pillage and bloodshed that accompanies the infernal reign of a mob. It is savagery indeed, but the disciplined, systematized and purposeful savagery characteristic of our strange and degenerate times. It is a methodical fighting of fear by that ancient device of tyrants, hostages.

Fear is the companion by day and the bedfellow by night of the masters of the Third Reich. Lucky, says the proverb, is the tyrant who dies a natural death. This fear of vengeance is extreme, but wholly justified, as the murder of Ernst vom Rath suffices to show. Because of this danger the 500,000 German Jews are now, it appears, to be held as hostages.

Britain And Palestine

Back in July, 1937, the Peel Commission, following a prolonged investigation of the Palestinian problem, proposed the draconian solution of partition. It urged that the Holy Land be divided into independent Jewish and Arab states with Great Britain continuing to exercise a mandate over the holy places and a corridor from Jerusalem to the sea. This scheme the British government made its own, declaring it to be "the best and most hopeful solution of the deadlock."

Now, after 16 months of uncertainty and mob violence which have made Palestine into dark and bloody ground, the British government has seen fit to change its mind. As a result of the findings of the Woodhead Commission appointed to look into the practical aspects of the partition plan, it has decided that the "political, administrative and financial difficulties involved in the proposal to create independent Arab and Jewish states inside Palestine are so great that this solution of the problem is impracticable."

The Palestinian problem thus reverts to the status quo and Great Britain has announced she will continue to assume responsibility "for the government of the whole of Palestine." But in the meantime the situation has become definitely worse and Britain's problems have multiplied rather than diminished. Mudling through has proved to be an extremely expensive business for the British.

It is now proposed that a new solution be sought by means of an understanding between Arabs and Jews which the British government will try by every means to promote. It is a pity this plan was not tried years ago. Certainly there were far greater chances of success of Arab-Jewish co-operation in the early years following Britain's assumption of the mandate than there are now with Arab nationalism on the march and Arab-Jewish and Arab-British relations exacerbated by a prolonged period of mob violence. But if there is any chance of success for the co-operative approach at this time the path should be explored to the uttermost.

In the meantime, Great Britain is more duty bound than ever to live up to the terms of the mandate and the pledges embodied in the Balfour declaration. This week's events in Germany, where Jews have been subjected to an outburst of Nazi barbarism, makes it peremptory that every possible place of refuge for that harassed people be open to them. Palestine is one such place and Great Britain would be remiss in its obligations and its duty to humanity if the Jewish homeland in Palestine were not kept open, to refugees from Nazi brutality.

Goal Of The A. F. Of L.

If prices, hence living costs, were suddenly to be inflated by some kind of monetary manipulation or fiscal imprudence it would, of course, be possible to raise monetary incomes to many times their existing levels. Indeed, it would be necessary to do so to maintain the consumer's purchasing power. Assuming, however, that no such catastrophic rise of prices impends, the A. F. of L. goal of an income of $4,000 yearly for every family seems decidedly utopian.

Even in the boom year of 1929 the Brookings Institution estimated that over 40 per cent of all American families had only a bare subsistence income or less. In that same year the average income of wage earners and salaried workers in the District of Columbia was but slightly over $1,800, although this average was higher than that of any State in the Union.

In short, even in a good business year the national income falls far short of providing the material goods needed to assure plenty for all our people. That would be true even if the total income were divided in equal parts among every family in the United States. It is greatly to the credit of the A. F. of L. that it recognizes this fact by coupling its demand for increased wages with one for maximum production, as well as "proper distribution." Heretofore too much emphasis has been placed upon monetary wage increases and upon plans for merely equalizing incomes.

The restrictions of output that have in some cases resulted from excessive additions to labor cost and from systematic curtailment schemes, reduce the amount of divisible wealth and definitely impoverish the masses of the people. No matter how high monetary wages and salaries may be, material well-being and rising living standards depend upon a large and growing volume of production.

Even if we never arrive at the $4,000 goal set by the A. F. of L., we shall progress toward it if we seek to achieve the dual aim of maximum production and mass purchasing power sufficient to absorb the output of our industries.

By False Pretenses

Washingtonians will find bitter irony in the current official reports that several hundred trees will have to be removed or destroyed to make way for the Jefferson Memorial. And that sentiment will doubtless be re-echoed by thousands of people throughout the country who have visited Washington to enjoy the informal beauty of this area.

The fact that this memorial will involve a wholesale destruction of trees was carefully concealed from the public until officials were almost ready to advertise for bids. Indeed, the public was flagrantly misled into the belief that this charming area would not be mutilated. When the question of an appropriation to start the project was under discussion it was said that only a few trees would be sacrificed. Now it appears certain that 126 American elms will be cut. Estimates place the number of cherry trees that will be destroyed at 174, and the fate of 154 others that will have to be transplanted is uncertain.

The strongest argument in favor of the modified Jefferson Memorial plan was that it would involve a minimum of change in the Tidal Basin area. On that argument the initial appropriation was finally driven through Congress. Now we are told that the south and east shorelines of the basin must be altered to create a more pleasing view from the memorial.

It is impossible to avoid the conclusion that this project has been foisted upon the Nation's Capital by false pretenses. Even those who wish to butcher the landscape of Washington's most charming natural area must deplore this procedure. And members of Congress returning to find that 600 trees will be "involved" in the transformation—many to be destroyed, some to be moved and a few to be left standing—may well feel that they have been tricked into approval of an undertaking whose destructive aspects were not fully understood.

An old-timer is one who remembers when he could buy a pound of steak for a dime, but forgets he had to work an hour to earn the dime.

"One out of every three married couples is childless." Here we are piling up a huge national debt for our children and grandchildren to pay, and a lot of them are declining to be born, the slackers!

Dies Committee Defended

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Omitting the political intrigue which may have been a basis for the apparent and deliberate campaign of ridicule against the work of the Dies committee in investigating un-American activities, the public should realize the fact that this committee is doing an outstanding work in bringing to the surface little-known facts regarding subversive activities in this country.

Irresponsible columnists and some newspapers have consistently disparaged the work of this committee. The testimony of the witnesses who appeared before it. Certain testimony was submitted by the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States and we resent any implication on the part of anyone concerned who it may be, that the testimony submitted is not thoroughly substantiated by positive proof of all statements made.

The courage of Congressman Dies in conducting his investigation in the face of every obstacle, political and subversive, that could be placed in his way is commended by the V. F. W. and should be expressly commended by the public at large. Communism, nazism and fascism have gained such sway in this country through subtle propaganda and the aid of astute politicians that it behooves every good American citizen to take cognizance of the vital information that is being brought to the surface by Congressman Dies. It is time that our citizens realized the fact that they are being consistently subjected to destructive propaganda emanating from foreign sources and that they, their families and their government are being systematically undermined. The Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States condemns the unwarranted attacks upon the constructive work of the Dies committee from whatever source.

Kemal Ataturk

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The death of Kemal Pasha, as he was familiarly called, removes from the world's great rulers one dictator, at least, whom all right-thinking men must mourn.

In many recent visits to Istanbul I saw his influence rising like a tide and reverence for him increasing. In earlier years the Turks would say, "If he can pull us out of our financial difficulties he will be almost a demigod." Without noise or show, and yet in a most drastic type of reform, Kemal junked Turkish trousers, the fez, the veil of the women, five-times-a-day prayers in the mosques, "Constantinople dogs" and the Arabic alphabet as the sole one for signs on the stores. He remade Turkey, and yet did it without growing power mad or drunk with egotism. He attended to his own business, which was to place Turkey on the modern map of the world, and give her people a sense of self-respect which they had never before had since the romantic days of a cruelly conquering power which gained them the name of the "terrible Turk."

One of the last but not the least of Kemal's reforms was to transform the famous St. Sophia Mosque into a museum. It had been one of the first of the great Christian churches of the earth; then it became a sort of Mecca for Islam; now it is one of the world's seven wonders to tourists who see old inscriptions and frescoes once more uncovered on its walls.

Probably not in our day have we seen one man do so much of a radical kind in way of reform for any country of earth, yet do so so quietly and so tactfully and with so little of resistance from the people, as we see in the career of this remarkable man. What an exemplification of what a dictator can do, yet call forth so little criticism, because what Kemal did was in sincerity and for the public good!

Inverted Republic

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: An inverted republic is a form of government in which measures which originate with an unofficial privy council of a chief of state are submitted in his name to the ostensible approval by a body styled representative before being promulgated as laws.

In the ultimate development of this type of government "representatives" are chosen by electors responsive to the power of the purse controlled by the chief of state. A close watch—such as that maintained by George III., who personally examined the voting list of the House of Commons and "awarded honors, places and pensions, or took means to signify his displeasure, in accordance with the votes of the individual members"—is maintained over the voting of representatives, and recalcitrants among them are dealt with by agents. The usual methods—as is evident from the conduct of George III.—are to deny them a share in the distribution of spoils, and, if this is not sufficiently effective, to undertake to alienate their constituents.

At its best this type of government is removed from any possibility of judicial review. Sometimes, however, complete fruition may be prevented if a sufficient number of uncoerced persons are allowed to remain on the roll of electors, and, in the interest of the public welfare, it is important to avoid this contingency.

Pedestrian Traffic

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I admire The Post for the great variety of letters it publishes on this page. Good, bad or indifferent, they all seem to get a hearing. For example, on November 1 there were three letters about pedestrian traffic control—and goodness knows we need it.

The first letter praised Los Angeles pedestrians for co-operating with traffic laws in that city, and Mr. Ullman seemed to know what he was talking about. The second epistle, indited by a representative of the Smith family, left the impression that we are "dumb driven cattle" if we obey traffic regulations. Presumably laws are for the other fellow. The third communication was from a W. A. Bell, of Lancaster, Pa., who would like to ring down the curtain on all automobile drivers.

I suppose he has done a good job in Lancaster and is now devoting a few days to Washington problems.

The Red Peril

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Post belittles the Dies Committee, yet no less than nine European countries have fallen to some kind of dictatorship within the past two decades because of communism—and nothing else. Apparently no country can escape a dictatorship where communism gets a hold.

Transfer Needed

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: No one will appreciate civil service establishing a transfer register in February more than I will.

I received an appointment in NPS as fireman, $1,200 a year, March 11. But owing to numerous bills back home in St. Joseph, Mo., and with my board and expenses here and the support of my wife and five children in St. Joseph, I could not live here on my present salary if I were to borrow money to bring them to Washington. I have sent out several hundred letters to appointing officers in Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa and Kansas, where living conditions are much cheaper, but as one can only obtain a transfer where there is a vacancy there is very little chance of obtaining a transfer by that procedure.

I just received a letter from my wife saying our children were sick from exposure from going without underwear and sufficient clothing, my salary won't stretch even to buy them new underwear. My wife is in very poor health. She says the bills every pay day and when there is anything left she buys coal and clothing, but there isn't anything left.

September 15, not wanting to take food out of my family's mouths to pay transportation, I rode freight trains 2,400 miles there and back to visit my family that I had not seen for over six months; took the flu after I got home and as a result would have it on my way back to Washington I was pulled off the freight at Grafton, W. Va., and given five days for riding a freight. But I finally made it back and didn't mind a few hardships since I got to visit my family.

But that's the way it is under the present transfer system. My family is suffering and needs me, and while my present salary would be reasonable enough in the field service, it isn't enough for Washington. But as it is I can't even get my family here, and living apart is like keeping up two families.

So, here, hoping civil service soon establishes a transfer register.

Prefers War To Nazism

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was deeply stirred by Barnet Novich's melancholy article, "Lights Go Out," in The Post, November 3.

One may not be moved by cold analysis of world events. Or, on the other hand, he may be derelict of a highly emotional picture of them. But when an article is so factually accurate, and at the same time so humanly compelling, as "Lights Go Out," then one must give heed.

Are we Americans, whose religion is freedom, to stand by apathetically while everything precious to us is being destroyed? Let us not believe that we can escape. If we were able once to absorb the democratic philosophies of France and England, we shall be even susceptible to the destructive philosophy of Nazism. This country is an offshoot of Europe. It is bound to Europe racially, culturally and economically. We must stand or fall with Europe.

If Americans are afraid to go to war for the sake of the ideal of human freedom then they are no longer Americans. I for one, would be glad to leave my wife and child, I should be willing to have bombs fall on them as well as on all my family, for the sake of this ideal.

For I do not want to live, and I do not want my children to live, in a Nazi world, in a world where man can not speak out his own mind, where he is a slave to brute force, where the possibility of human progress is destroyed, where human intelligence, decency and kindness are crushed.

The Post Impressionist

Time Out Of Joint

IT IS fortunate that Albert Einstein, the apologist of relativity, is in residence in the United States. His services probably will be needed to guide Americans back to 1939 from the time-space divagations of the New York World's Fair. Already so confused by daily events that we can hardly tell whether we are living in the Neanderthal Age, or in a future in which invaders from other planets raise problems of terrestrial defense, we are bound to be still more befuddled by experiences forecast with breathless awe in periodical bulletins from the fair's press department.

Current perplexities about time and space have prepared us for the condition, foreshadowed by these announcements, in which none will know when, or even where, he is. Such confusion is illustrated notably by individuals. Signor Mussolini, for example, has obviously ceased to live in the twentieth century, and has removed to the era of the Roman Empire. Herr Hitler has retreated further, already yet, and finds himself in the age of Genghis Khan, of Barbarossa, and Attila, with week-end excursions into the region and era of Odin and Thor.

In the latter realm perhaps he meets the future, and examines the metallic and other properties of Thor's lofty and fabulous hammer. In the Orient, caverns and angels consort in the dawn of time, with occasional forays into the comparatively civilized epoch of the Trojans. In the United States thousands annually speed with great rapidity by motorcar into the great beyond.

All this is now. But the time and space span of the World's Fair will be even more remarkable. There an infinity of time will be compressed upon an area of very limited space. And there, also, an infinity of space will be compressed into a few seconds of terrestrial time, and be lodged securely within a few square yards of Manhattan real estate. As a result, the visitor is sure to be mystified and lost in relation to both space and time.

When he manages to return to the everyday world, and to the time that is marked on clocks and the manner that are approved by Emily Post, neither will mean anything very definite to him. And if they do, it is difficult to believe that he will be able to adjust himself to their former and ordinary compulsions. For besides the experiences that are waiting him at the fair, even such adventures as those with H. G. Wells' Time-Machine, in the fiction of a couple of decades ago, will seem as ordinary as a bombing raid to an Andalusian bull fighter.

The first evidence that the fair management itself is exceedingly time conscious, or unconscious, came with the recent burial of a "time capsule" in which memorabilia of current civilization were inclosed in scientifically compressed form, together with directions for getting at their inner secrets. The burial was made in a mood of resignation to an expected disaster that will bury our civilization also.

How soon some alien race of men, digging through the debris of Manhattan, will come upon the capsule, is a matter of differing opinions. Some look ahead 5,000 years to destroy the event. Others claim that extreme good fortune may postpone the necessity for digging to 1960 or at the latest 1971.

There isn't room here to describe all the gyrations of time and space that are being plotted. A plan announced only a few days ago to bring back to life the New York of Lily Langtry, Lillian Russell, F. T. Barnum, the Cardiff Giant, and Gen. Tom Thumb, under the mystic touch of Mr. George Jessel, is only a timid thrust into the "dark backward and abyss." It may, however, afford some preparation for more adventurous expeditions.

For example, those who still retain their poise following the Martian invasion of October 30 last will be able to go (let us quote the press department exactly) "on a rocket trip to the planet Venus, where they will see a world similar to the earth a million years ago, but also populated by colonizers from the planet Mars. A Martian city inhabited by strange-looking creatures with huge heads, whose scientific development is far in advance of that of mankind; weird weapons of destruction such as the disintegrator gun and the electronic destroyer, radio-controlled, rocket ships and terrifying beasts of the Venusian jungle, will be encountered on the trip. . . . The rocket ship in which the journey will be made will seat 150 persons and will actually produce the sensation of a flight through space."

This is only a sample; necessarily so, because the space limitations of a newspaper must still conform to the standards of 1938. But I think it indicates the date into which we all are to be plunged very shortly, and from which the more highly suggestible of us may never entirely recover. In fact some of us are in it permanently now, relatively and absolutely.

Useful Taunts

HAS IT EVER occurred to any of us that our cultured friends across the sea may be doing us a helpful service in their robust denunciations of the United States as a land of gangsters?

Mussolini, of all people, started this, and when, after a long time, he touches a nerve and made us twitter, Hitler's press took up the charge. Now both call us a nation of gangsters. And Americans who, earlier in the game, took a mischievous pride in this reputation have now become ashamed, realizing that there is more than a grain of truth in what they say. Apparently our gangs are not as bad now as they were during prohibition, but it would be foolish to say that they are extinct. The Department of Justice has done good work, but the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, and Tom Dewey in New York has not only won spectacular victories over some of the most defiant low-lives of the underworld but, more important, has swung public sentiment angrily against organized crime, particularly in collaboration with local politics and government.

IT IS RATHER pathetic, yet a hopeful sign, when ordinary citizens of Chicago, after generations of submission to politico-criminal combinations, speculate wistfully on the possibility that Chicago, too, may one day discover a Dewey.

The very name of Dewey suggests hope, and now that Mr. Dewey has received instructions to proceed with his work he probably will kindle in the people of many communities an aggressive purpose to smash the rackets which prey on them and punish criminals in politics.

I have not the text of Mr. Roosevelt's recent remarks about overemphasis on internal corruption, but, as I remember, he thought such talk could be overdone. Certainly it is bad publicity for the United States as a country, but if it leads to practical prosecution of grafters and hoodlums and results in a new concept of responsibility and honesty in politics the country will be the winner. The Russians shoot grafters. That is a little severe, but we seldom even send them to jail.

WE HAVE LAUGHED off such crime, not realizing, as the Russians do, that a grafter who robs the children of their schooling or the people generally of money paid us taxes for public services is guilty of a worse crime than mere highway robbery. He strikes at the security and political stability of the country, and that is no laughing matter.

Possibly if those two bland, defiant thieves in public office who respectively stole millions from the State of Illinois and about a quarter of a million from the taxpayers of Cook County were to be tried a year hence, instead of having been tried a few years ago, they would be convicted. Sentiment is changing.

During prohibition we got a very bad press abroad. We deserved it. And Americans traveling in Europe, far from showing shame, boasted of the criminality of our gangs, particularly of the Chicago gangs which were tied in with the local government.

NOW, FROM THE dictator countries, it is being hammered home to us that we tolerated criminality as a routine nuisance and permitted the growth of a belief that the spoils of office included graft. With the worst intention in the world Mussolini and Hitler will have done this country a great favor if by their exaggerated and unmanly remarks about a nominally friendly nation they shame the American people into a new attitude toward all crime and particularly graft.

That Mussolini's fascism itself began as a racket, with neighborhood gangs extorting tribute from gamblers, prostitutes and respectable merchants, and that Hitler copied Mussolini need not be considered. Extortion by terrorism is historically identified with Italy. Mussolini himself broke up the Sicilian Mafia and now his own racket disowns its low beginnings.

Doctors often use deadly poisons to cure disease, and if the ill-timed taunts of the Fascists and Nazis help to goad the Americans to a robust moral turn against graft and other crime the intention can be ignored.

Thousands of "obituary notices" have been spread through the Sudeten country and in what remains of Czechoslovakia. Schwarze Korpe, the official publication of Hitler's black uniformed guards, in which the Fuehrer is said to take considerable pride and is reported to correct personally before publication, considers the "obituary notices" an enormous joke and publishes it set off in black mourning bands in its current number. Here it is:

In deepest grief and sorrow, the undersigned give notice of the final passing of their beloved child of care—Czechoslovakia.

She died after long and intense pain on Saturday, 1st October, 1938, following an operation for appendicitis, having received the spiritual comfort of the Holy Communion in Moscow and surrendering herself to the will of the Fuehrer at the age of 20.

The solemn burial was performed from October 1 to 10, 1938, by the German army.

The Requiem Mass for the repose of her soul will take place on October 26, 1938.

Silent condolence is requested by Gottwald, Dimitroff, Syrový—godparents; the League of Nations—parents; Litvinov, Staline—uncles. Undertakers—Benes, Jaksch and Co., late Masaryk.

Geneva, October 1, 1938.

Schwarze Korpe announces that this obituary notice of a democratic nation is being widely distributed in the Sudeten territory.

"It is not scorn or malicious joy over a beaten foe," says the Nazi publication, "but healthy political humor, which has, after the days of suffering and terror in Sudeten-Germany, now found expression—a humor which can only thrive where one has no hate for the enemy of yesterday. What strange creatures we Germans are; after victory we always let reconciliation follow, and forget in humor the harm others have done us."

PEGLER

TO THE EDITOR OF THE POST—Sir:

No person of good judgment would object to well-considered regulations controlling pedestrians provided there was sufficient control of automobiles to insure the person's safety.

As well as reasonable safety, discussion of pedestrian control without any real check on the deadly automobiles and their frequently incompetent or selfish and lawless drivers seems on a par with the method of certain European states where those out of favor are taken into "protective custody" (euphemism for jail or concentration camp) while little is done to control the killers.

One of our correspondents estimates that over 50 per cent of Washington's pedestrians are killed. Inasmuch as the others (except those unable to walk) are obviously part-time pedestrians, the problem should have more consideration from the pedestrian point of view. But it seems as though the officials who plan and enforce our traffic rules have exclusively the driver's point of view. Under present conditions in the District of Columbia the pedestrian, however precisely he obeys all rules and suggestions, is constantly menaced by the automobiles.

If he waits at the corner and starts to cross on appearance of the green light, he is often, sometimes, ignored by the car which has ignored the yellow warning and is still crossing after the red comes on, or more frequently he is menaced by cars which have been waiting with him for the lights to change and now thrust themselves upon him, making a left or right turn, sometimes with insulting horns, as if they instead of the pedestrian had the right of way. Theoretically, the pedestrian may have the right of way over cars making turns—but this would never be guessed from what is seen in Washington.

The car seldom let the pedestrian have it, and the pedestrian doesn't dare take it. The cars honk impatiently and the frightened pedestrians draw back or run.

In this state of affairs our traffic authorities seem to acquiesce. Often police stand at intersections, ignore entirely the pedestrians attempting to cross. They wave on the cars and the pedestrians who have quite properly started to cross with the green are left baffled in midstream. At some downtown corners the left turn and right turn traffic is so thick and the drivers are so impatient that pedestrians are unwilling to risk life and limb wait vainly through several changes of lights before it is reasonably safe to cross.

Even the "walk" signs, which were believed to be for protection as well as control of pedestrians, give them little help against the cars making turns. That the pedestrians are desperate is evidenced by their present tendency to disregard the lights and get across as best they can. In fact, jay-walking in the middle of the block is often safer than crossing at intersections where left-turning and right-turning automobiles whiz suddenly around to let the victim who has eyes in only the front of his head.

Before a system of increased control is actually attempted here, it might be well to study the systems of cities where some thought is given to the pedestrian's rights as well as to his duties. If a committee, with at least one member who is 100 per cent pedestrian, would visit San Diego, Calif., for example, such committee might learn much of value to the pedestrian and driver. On a recent short visit, I noted the following: At light-controlled intersections pedestrians wait for the lights to turn even when no cars were near, but at these same corners no car, making left or right turn, made the slightest attempt to go through while pedestrians were passing or even preparing to pass, thus giving the pedestrian a genuine right of way. Furthermore, on crossings without lights or police control the pedestrians were given undisputed and extremely courteous right of way.

As I was unaccustomed, because of my long residence in Washington to the idea of receiving courtesy from drivers or of having any rights as pedestrian other than theoretic, I did not at first realize the novel conditions. If I prepared to cross at an uncontrolled corner, and, seeing a car approaching, stopped as self-protection in Washington requires, the car came to a stop and the driver actually signaled me to cross, even at a point where the road was so wide that if the car proceeded it would have passed 20 feet or more in front of me.

Again, when at controlled intersections I was crossing with the green and saw a car starting to make a turn and held back as safety demands here in D. C., the driver came to a full stop—even though my pause gave him a clear path. But when, because the street seemed clear of approaching cars, I started to cross against the light, I quickly noted that other pedestrians waited patiently for the green. I was told that the pedestrians in San Diego had wholeheartedly co-operated because of the rigid control and severe penalization of drivers enforced by police and courts and supported by an aroused public opinion.

It would be time enough to start a more rigid control of pedestrians if, having really enforced the present rules for drivers and having given the pedestrians some actual protection, we find there are still preventable casualties. Under such circumstances it would not be so necessary first to prepare the public mind as to now being done by a deluge of propaganda in the attempt to convince us of the necessity of "protective custody" against the killers.

EDWIN C. REED, Washington, Oct. 30.

Right Of Way

TO THE EDITOR OF THE POST—Sir:

If you are a jaywalker when you cross the street in the middle of the block, what are you when you have to dodge speeding, honking cars in order to get half way across to car-loading places located in the middle of the block?

And what are you when you attempt to cross at the crossing with the lights and a long line of motorists making right or left turns give you dirty looks and a blast of the horn as they drive you back up on the sidewalk? Did someone say that the pedestrian has the right of way under such circumstances? Well, he is liable to lose a leg or an arm if he tries to take it. STANLEY E. KELLY, Washington, Oct. 25.

Rep. Dies to Ask

$200,000 More to Expose Reds Here

Cleveland, Nov. 11 (P)—The Dies Congressional committee has just received the preface of its "expose of subversive activities in America," its chairman, Martin Dies (Democrat, Texas), told American Legion members here today.

Dies said his committee was prepared to make new disclosures "more startling than the people ever dreamed of."

Dies also announced today he would ask Congress to appropriate between $200,000 and $300,000 to continue the committee's investigation for two more years. The inquiry, financed originally by a $25,000 appropriation, will terminate in December if additional funds are not forthcoming, he said.

Even the "walk" signs, which were believed to be for protection as well as control of pedestrians, give them little help against the cars making turns. That the pedestrians are desperate is evidenced by their present tendency to disregard the lights and get across as best they can. In fact, jay-walking in the middle of the block is often safer than crossing at intersections where left-turning and right-turning automobiles whiz suddenly around to let the victim who has eyes in only the front of his head.

Before a system of increased control is actually attempted here, it might be well to study the systems of cities where some thought is given to the pedestrian's rights as well as to his duties. If a committee, with at least one member who is 100 per cent pedestrian, would visit San Diego, Calif., for example, such committee might learn much of value to the pedestrian and driver. On a recent short visit, I noted the following: At light-controlled intersections pedestrians wait for the lights to turn even when no cars were near, but at these same corners no car, making left or right turn, made the slightest attempt to go through while pedestrians were passing or even preparing to pass, thus giving the pedestrian a genuine right of way. Furthermore, on crossings without lights or police control the pedestrians were given undisputed and extremely courteous right of way.

As I was unaccustomed, because of my long residence in Washington to the idea of receiving courtesy from drivers or of having any rights as pedestrian other than theoretic, I did not at first realize the novel conditions. If I prepared to cross at an uncontrolled corner, and, seeing a car approaching, stopped as self-protection in Washington requires, the car came to a stop and the driver actually signaled me to cross, even at a point where the road was so wide that if the car proceeded it would have passed 20 feet or more in front of me.

Again, when at controlled intersections I was crossing with the green and saw a car starting to make a turn and held back as safety demands here in D. C., the driver came to a full stop—even though my pause gave him a clear path. But when, because the street seemed clear of approaching cars, I started to cross against the light, I quickly noted that other pedestrians waited patiently for the green. I was told that the pedestrians in San Diego had wholeheartedly co-operated because of the rigid control and severe penalization of drivers enforced by police and courts and supported by an aroused public opinion.

It would be time enough to start a more rigid control of pedestrians if, having really enforced the present rules for drivers and having given the pedestrians some actual protection, we find there are still preventable casualties. Under such circumstances it would not be so necessary first to prepare the public mind as to now being done by a deluge of propaganda in the attempt to convince us of the necessity of "protective custody" against the killers.

EDWIN C. REED, Washington, Oct. 30.

Right Of Way

TO THE EDITOR OF THE POST—Sir:

If you are a jaywalker when you cross the street in the middle of the block, what are you when you have to dodge speeding, honking cars in order to get half way across to car-loading places located in the middle of the block?

And what are you when you attempt to cross at the crossing with the lights and a long line of motorists making right or left turns give you dirty looks and a blast of the horn as they drive you back up on the sidewalk? Did someone say that the pedestrian has the right of way under such circumstances? Well, he is liable to lose a leg or an arm if he tries to take it. STANLEY E. KELLY, Washington, Oct. 25.

Today And Tomorrow

The Astonishing Normality Of The American Voters

SO MANY THINGS in the world are in turbulent change that it is something of a surprise to discover how altogether normal was the behavior of the American electorate on Tuesday. Though the outer world is convulsed, though the air is stirred and echoes can be heard here, the ebb and flow of the political tides in America are still as regular as they have been for the last 80 years. Though the issues change, though local and regional affairs often follow independent lines, for the Nation as a whole it is still true that the conservative mood lasts approximately 15 years and the innovating mood lasts approximately eight years.

The innovating mood, which expresses itself as the New Deal, became dominant in the midterm elections of 1930. This is 1938 and it has run its course. It was preceded by a conservative phase, known as "normalcy." It became dominant in the midterm elections of 1918 and lasted for 12 years—until 1930. Conservative "normalcy" was preceded by an innovating phase known as Theodore Roosevelt's Bull Moose and Woodrow Wilson's New Freedom. It became dominant at the midterm elections of 1910 and lasted for eight years, until 1918. It was preceded by the conservatism of McKinley and Mark Hanna, somewhat modified in its later years but not profoundly changed by President Theodore Roosevelt. This conservative phase first manifested itself at the midterm elections of 1894, became dominant in the elections of 1896, and showed a strong tendency to disintegrate in the last few years of Theodore Roosevelt's second term.

JUDGING BY PAST experience, one may say that the conservative phase can be prolonged a little by prosperity and by adopting progressive policies. And it is possible that the innovators could prolong their tenure a little if well in advance of their sixth year in national office, they took an essentially conservative line.

But these things rarely happen. Theodore Roosevelt was a conservative who adopted progressive policies. But Taft was a conservative in a time when the tide was running the other way. Wilson refused to believe the election returns of 1918 and his last two years were a disaster. Hoover made the same political mistake. He tried to swim against the tide, not realizing that the tide was bound to change. And Franklin D. Roosevelt made the mistake again after 1936.

WHAT IS IT that causes these tides, and why are they so amazingly regular. We talk of "tides." But actually, of course, these alternating moods of conservatism and innovation take place in the minds and sentiments of the individual voters. For it is not true that every boy and every girl that is born into the world is either a little liberal or else a little conservative. The fact that at one time Calvin Coolidge was the idol of the people and that five years later Franklin Roosevelt was the idol, shows that even Gilbert and Sullivan could be wrong, that the same voters are conservative at one time and innovating at another. So the question is: what causes the individual to change his mood?

The answer, I believe, is something like this: The predominant mood, that is to say the one which is most general in the American people, and also the strongest, is the mood of conservatism, that is to say, the will to hold on to what they have, to protect and maintain their property, their position in the community, their customary rights. When they have felt entirely secure in these things for a sufficiently long time, they become ready to deal with the accumulated abuses which conservative governments have neglected. They turn to the innovators, and their enthusiasm grows while obvious abuses are being corrected. But it cools as soon as the innovators begin to invade the essentials of conservatism, when for example, they threaten property in general, say by wild spending, or law and order by tolerating the sit-down strike, or the social discipline under which work is rewarded and idleness punished, as in some of the administration of relief. Then the instinct to conserve, which is much stronger than the instinct to innovate, asserts itself, and the political tide changes. And the probable reason why the innovating phase lasts about eight years, two before a progressive President is elected, four years of undisputed power, and two of decline, is that it takes just about four years under our form of government to pass the reforms that were demanded and then to make mistakes that will cause the reaction. Four years of high-pressure legislation will produce more changes than the fundamentally conservative mass of the people can digest or will stomach.

THERE IS NOTHING deplorable in the fact that the American electorate has been and still is normally conservative, and that its innovating mood is shorter than its conservative mood. It is a very good thing. For it shows that the great mass of the people who determine the destiny of the Republic are deeply attached to it, are attached to it by sentiment and by personal interest. And as long as this is the fact, the democratic way of life is secure. For this conservatism is the only thing that will effectively check, before it runs to extremes, the radicalism that divides the people and evokes the reaction that destroys their liberties.

The unmistakable lesson, it seems to me, to be drawn from the failure of democracy in so many parts of the world is that democracy depends upon the existence of a great mass of people who are essentially conservative in that they already possess property, position, and rights, and who can be humane, tolerant and idealistic because they feel secure in the essentials. Europe is revolutionary today because this central mass has been impoverished and in some countries ruined, by the war, by inflation, and by bad government. Democracy has had no effective defenders because the legions of democracy are drawn from the middle class, the middle class—all he knew about the matter was what he had read in the newspapers, and, of course, you always have to check up on that.

IN THE UNITED STATES there is a great middle class comprising farmers, a considerable part of the wage workers, shopkeepers, businessmen and professional people. They are still indisputably predominant in the country. They are still able to assert themselves easily and normally as soon as they feel that innovation impairs what they regard as the foundations of the American social order. And that is why the prospects of democracy are good. They are still so good in this hemisphere.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Between 20 and 30 different models of bathtubs are on the American market this year.

Deciding which kind you prefer is like picking out a new automobile, only more intricate. Once upon a time a bathtub was just a bathtub. If you were planning to have a house, the builder would ask, "Do you want a bathtub?" and you had to say "Yes" or "No" and forget it.

But not now. You knew a few years ago it would be a new automobile, plain white and with four legs. Just a Model T tub. Today you can't leave a thing like that to chance. It has become the major item in house planning.

You can be careless about the dining-room, indifferent about the living-room and slipshod in planning the bedrooms, but to be up with the times you mustn't make the slightest mistake about the bathtubs. They now dominate the American home, and it has become commonplace to speak of a home as having nine baths and three rooms.

Some years ago the bathroom and bathtub designers quit designing for durability and went in for glamour, fashion and color effects. Soon there were more color schemes offered in tubs than in wallpaper.

Many a home builder has suffered nervous breakdown through the strain of merely selecting the right color for a bath. It has reached a point where hundreds of people believe they just can't enjoy a wash in a robin's-egg blue tub, or only mildly happy chasing soap in a lavender tub and never attain real bathing comfort except in a canary yellow one with black borders.

This season they have run out of startling color schemes and gone in more for new shapes. The cater-cornered tub is right smart now. It makes bathing difficult and gives you a better excuse for not doing so.

Then there is the demi-tasse, the three-quarter, the underslung, the overslung, the oval, the square and the cabinet tub with built-in radio, ice box, phonograph and piano.

DR. SWISHER, TALKERMASTER, LAY US STUFF

THE SITUATION is strong at the top, the employee-collector had us know. At this moment, the President holds the whip hand in all collections of Haiti and Hong Kong issues. The albums, deep in the President's own library, tell the story.

In the whole encouraging picture but one dark moment occurs, the price of the new issues are going up by leaps and bounds. The latest appearance of the Hayes and the 20-cent Garfield, on the twenty-second of this month will appear the 21-cent Arthur and the 22-cent Cleveland. And in the seventh issue, will appear the $5 Coolidge. It is embarrassing.

THE HIGH officials of the Government traditionally have mailed to their friends and admirers the first day covers. The number of these has been great. Now they find themselves having to shake down considerably to meet the cost of so many 21-cent and 22-cent stamps. And, to top it off, comes the important $5 Coolidge. But, withal, the Postoffice Department officials let us know that the stamps will be sold. They expect to sell 10,000 Coolidge stamps on the first day.

"I'll bet Coolidge wouldn't have

There is a hint in a book by Mr. James P. Warburg, who in the early days of the New Deal, was one to Mr. Roosevelt and knew him well. About one aspect of the President, Mr. Warburg says:

"Mr. Roosevelt's primary desire is a desire to be agreeable, that is, to be liked and admired. . . . I believe that Mr. Roosevelt wanted to become President primarily because being President expresses, more than anything else could express it, the fact of being liked and admired by the greatest possible number of people."

Then Mr. Warburg considers how this type of man is likely to act whenever he feels that admiration of him is beginning to wane. Mr. Warburg feels that Mr. Roosevelt's nature will lead him to reach out more and more forcibly for revival of the applause.

"It is my considered opinion that as time goes on and the popular applause upon which Mr. Roosevelt is so dependent becomes less and less audible, he will become more feverish in his activity."

Roosevelt's Reaction

By Mark Sullivan

The Election Blow

THERE WAS WIDESPREAD anticipation about President Roosevelt's first press conference following the election—speculation about how he would take it.

How he would take it, and about what, whether he would give any sign of his future course. Much of this anticipation was legitimate, for the course of the next two years depends much on how a man of Mr. Roosevelt's temperament reacts to a check. Yet some of the anticipation, I fear, was a little of that "I Am Dancing With Tears in My Eyes," but I suspect that was merely a wisecrack.

MR. ROOSEVELT looked poised and cheerful. His opening remarks might be interpreted as defensive, and quite different from what might have been his remarks had the election gone otherwise. He began by giving out some bits of news of a caliber which would hardly be important enough for a President's press conference.

He mentioned the unimportant announcements about the Philippines and Guatemala. He concluded his budget of news with a negative announcement—he had no appointments to announce, though there might be some in a week.

Then questions began to come from the newspapermen. One asked him if he had any appointment in mind for the defeated Governor of Michigan, Mr. Murphy, whether for the Supreme Court or any other office. Mr. Roosevelt replied that he had not thought about it. That equivocal response and various equivalents—"I don't know"—"Nothing to say at this time"—were rather more frequent at this conference than at ordinary ones. To one question he replied with a gleam of his familiar wit and faint touch of malice—all he knew about the matter was what he had read in the newspapers, and, of course, you always have to check up on that.

FINALLY CAME the question that everybody was waiting for. Someone, softening his query with humor, asked whether Mr. Roosevelt had anything to say about what Mr. Dooley called the "election returns." Mr. Roosevelt indicated he had no comment. Did he regard the election as affecting the liberal movement in America? He did not. Would the election have any effect on his legislative program? He would not say. Did he anticipate a coalition of conservatives and orthodox Democrats in Congress? Mr. Roosevelt's reply was no.

Mr. Roosevelt was asked whether he had opened the envelope containing the pre-election prediction of results which it is his custom to make. Mr. Roosevelt said that he had and that his prediction had not been very wrong. He had predicted, he said, that New York would go just about as it did. As to Senators, he had predicted the Republicans would gain one less than they did. As to the House, he had predicted that the Republicans would gain 85 seats.

THE NEAREST Mr. Roosevelt came to serious comment was in reply to a question which asked whether he thought the re-election of Senator Wagner, of New York, would have any effect on proposals to amend the Wagner labor act.

Mr. Roosevelt said that Senator Wagner's majority of about half a million seemed to show that the people liked his record.

One would say that Mr. Roosevelt met an awkward situation gallantly. Yet "gallantly" is too strong a word. He just acted with ordinary ease and poise.

Yet the question remains. Given a public man of President Roosevelt's temperament, how does he act when a first touch of adversity hits him?

THERE IS A HINT in a book by Mr. James P. Warburg, who in the early days of the New Deal, was one to Mr. Roosevelt and knew him well. About one aspect of the President, Mr. Warburg says:

"Mr. Roosevelt's primary desire is a desire to be agreeable, that is, to be liked and admired. . . . I believe that Mr. Roosevelt wanted to become President primarily because being President expresses, more than anything else could express it, the fact of being liked and admired by the greatest possible number of people."

Then Mr. Warburg considers how this type of man is likely to act whenever he feels that admiration of him is beginning to wane. Mr. Warburg feels that Mr. Roosevelt's nature will lead him to reach out more and more forcibly for revival of the applause.

"It is my considered opinion that as time goes on and the popular applause upon which Mr. Roosevelt is so dependent becomes less and less audible, he will become more feverish in his activity."

Rule By Terror

By Barnet Nover

Frankenstein's Monster

THE TRUE NATURE of the regime which governs Germany today, which has governed this land for more than five years, is revealed as in a blinding flash by the ghastly events of the past week.

To find a parallel for the savage and merciless anti-Semitic terror let loose in the Third Reich following the assassination of a German diplomat by a half-crazed Polish Jew, one has to go back to the darkest period of the Middle Ages. Nothing like it has been seen in any civilized country in modern times; certainly not in time of peace.

It would be a serious mistake to suppose, however, that this wave of terrorism merely represents an upsurge in Germany of brute elements which are to be found in all countries and all times, and whose activities have written some of the darkest pages in the troubled history of the human race.

IT WAS THAT, all right. But it was also far more than that. It is precisely

Italian Baptists Try to Excel As Both Churchmen and Citizens

Only Such Self-Supporting Organization
Many Perfect in Sunday School Attendance
Are Active Civic, Fraternal Workers

Appreciation for the religious freedom, in search of which their Huguenot ancestors fled from France in the seventeenth century, is demonstrated in the Italian Baptist Church.

Legiance to church, community and country.

Affiliated with the Chiesa del Redentore, a little church at New York avenue and Kirby street northwest, they not only take pride in the fact that all their 85 members are American citizens, but also that 13 have compiled a total of 185 years of perfect Sunday school attendance.

With records ranging from 10 to 20 years, led by Abbie Marsaglia, the pastor's daughter, attendance pace setters include Jeanette, Marie and Creste Clorchi, Mrs. M. Biser, Mary Grove and the Rev. and Mrs. Marsaglia and their children, including Mrs. Olga Gallahorn; Orlando, Elizabeth, Joe and Adele Marsaglia, the latter Bible School superintendent.

Used Masonic Temple

Members of the only self-supporting Italian Protestant congregation in the United States, the parishioners have become active in District of Columbia civic and Parent-Teacher Associations, especially the Masons.

From 1918 to 1923 this order donated the temporary meeting place for the group.

Joseph Spano, church treasurer, active in the American Legion, the Board of Trade and the Chevy Chase Citizens' Association; Leonard Dell'Era, Luigi Ricucci and Donato Marraffa, deacons; Vincent Vasco and Louis Mancuso, trustees, and the Rev. Mr. Marsaglia are Masons, as well as Clement Maggia, pastor, who recently was elected President Roosevelt's birthday cake and also prepared spaghetti served to 400 at a church dinner in the Northeast Masonic Temple.

Active in District of Columbia

Tomorrow at the church there will be a special Corporate Communion for men of the parish under auspices of the League of Nations.

Breakfast will be served immediately after the service.

At 10 o'clock there will be an Armistice Day service. Dr. Z. B. Phillips will deliver the seventh sermon of his series on "The Opportunities of Life in Our Present Day Civilization." His special theme will be "Peace War." At this service the choir will sing the celebrated "Recessional" of Rudyard Kipling.

At 8 p. m. there will be evening prayer and sermon by the Rev. Duncan Fraser. This is the fifth sermon in the series on "The Creeds" and the special theme will be "The Communion of Saints."

St. John's. The choir of men and boys, under Arthur Howes, organist and choirmaster, will sing "Hear My Prayer, O God" by Arceledi. There will be morning prayer and sermon by the rector, Dr. Oliver J. Hart, at 9:30 and 11 o'clock.

All Saints. The Rev. Henry Teller Cooke will speak at 7:30 and 11 a. m. services.

Methodist Ministers to Trade Pulpits

An Annual Affair
Dr. Cromer at Wesley
Dr. Neff at Emory

Local ministers of the three branches of the Methodist denomination tomorrow will have their annual exchange of pulpits, acquainting themselves with members of other congregations.

While Dr. Horace E. Cromer, pastor of Emory Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is preaching at Wesley Methodist Church on "There Shall Be Peace," his parishioners will be hearing Dr. J. Luther Neff, Wesley cleric, on "Duty and Beyond."

At Douglas, the congregation will hear the Rev. Eugene C. MacKlosky, former president of the Maryland annual conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, while the Rev. Clarence H. Cochran is occupying MacKlosky's pulpit.

Dr. Burman at Epworth

Guest preacher at Hamline at 11 a. m. will be Dr. John Paul Tyler, pastor of the Christ Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Alexandria.

The regular pastor, Dr. Harry W. Burman, will give the morning address at the Epworth Methodist Church, South.

Dr. Thomas W. Sutherland, of the Seat Pleasant Church, will exchange with the Rev. C. M. Harris, of the Brentwood South Methodist Church, Dr. H. I. Kester, pastor of the Congress Street Methodist Protestant Church, and Dr. Robert K. Nevitt will occupy the Trinity pulpit. The Rev. John A. Traylor, of the Lewis Memorial Methodist Protestant Church, the Rev. John R. Edwards, of the Union Church, also will exchange.

Dr. Harris' Topics

Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, pastor of Foundry Methodist Episcopal Church, will address his congregation tomorrow at 11 a. m. on "Riches Unclaimed," and in the evening on "What's Wrong with the Church?"

"Divine Imperatives" will be the topic of the Rev. Orris Gravenor Robinson, pastor of the Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church, at the morning service, and at 8 p. m. he will talk on "Living Without Tension."

The new pastor of the Francis Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will preach at both the 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. services on "What Seek Ye?" and "The Abiding Christ," respectively.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Irked by Prying Curiosity of Night-Working Husbands Anent Their Activities, Wives Ask Advice

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: We are two young women who work in the same office and we both have the same problem—which is that our husbands check up on us. They want to know how we spend every minute of our time when they aren't with us; they want to know where every cent that we spend goes, and they act as if they suspected us of heaven knows what at every session of questioning.

One husband works at night and the other goes to night school, so we are expected to handle most of the small business transactions connected with our homes. We give them credit for having enough sense to spend money wisely, inasmuch as they have sense enough to earn it, and we don't require a detailed account of their every action when they are out of sight.

Therefore, we feel that since we earn our half of the family income, we should have a little money to spend as we please and no questions asked; that we should not have to report such innocent activities as buying groceries, paying bills and occasionally having a soda with some other girl. Both of us do our own housework, but our husbands seem to think we have lots of extra time, and we have to account for our actions like a criminal on trial.

We know that these questions are not posed for merely conversational purposes, as every answer is duly weighed and we are either reprimanded on the one hand, or the admission grudgingly made that no wrong was committed. They do not seem to be jealous of us, and we have never given cause for jealousy. Their attitude seems to be that we haven't enough gumption to conduct ourselves correctly. We should like your comment on our problem, and any advice you have to offer. Sincerely,

YOUNG MARRIEDS.

Shut-Out's Reaction

DEAR YOUNG MARRIEDS: I suppose if your respective husbands' mental processes could be subjected to X-ray scrutiny, it would be found that resentment, at being denied leisurely enjoyment of your companionship of evenings, is primarily responsible for their oppressive curiosity concerning the manner in which you spend that time. No doubt both couples are more or less newlywed; the young ladies in the quartet are probably either normally or superlatively attractive and fun loving (as the husbands well know) and hence the latter suffer constant subconscious doubt, of a jealousy uneasy sort concerning their bride's welfare and deportment in their absence. They don't distrust your good intentions as much as they defensively question the validity of your judgment. And I say defensively because I mean that in quizzing and lecturing you, they are seeking thus to convince both themselves and you that you couldn't possibly manage without their superior wisdom to draw on.

I daresay that given a more normal domestic set-up, with work to occupy their minds and hands by day, and with evenings given over to such social pursuits as the young married couple of modest income may enjoy, they would be blandly indifferent to whom you saw or what you spent from your personal allowance, during those odd hours you were out of their sight. As things are, however, they manifest that fretful impatience with the actions and transactions of intimates which characterizes the average chronic shut-in, who feels a need to invent business for himself where none exists. Only, in their case, they are just the reverse—a shut-out. They are shut out of your life, or so they fancy, to a degree which leaves them vaguely dissatisfied and distressed.

If there is a remedy for the situation, it consists in refusing, quite simply and frankly, to submit further to the profitless and humiliating ordeal of the daily quiz. Without anger and without defiance, in that calm, self-respecting manner which is the hallmark of the true adult, tell your respective husbands that they are reducing your mutual relationship to too low a level to be tolerable, in acting on the assumption that the wife is required to account in detail for all her actions. Tell them that mutual trust is the very foundation stone of marriage, and that inasmuch as you respect their social wisdom and financial acumen, you expect to be similarly complimented in return. Having spoken your mind, decline to answer petty and pointless questions thereafter. If they continue to haggle over money matters, turn the household accounts over to them to manage, and let them stop and pay bills for a change. This probably will prove to be a most efficacious means of compelling respect for your wifely economies. M. H.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Nov. 11.

THE HORSES have pranced back to their barns, the horsey set has relaxed and the Garden has relaxed. The National Horse Show has run its course for the year.

Our horsey set is divided into two parts, or one less than Caesar's Gaul, though our horsey show needs how to none in the matter of gall. One part, led by the Vanderbilt and the Whiteheads, are the running horsey set—while another small but potent group comprises the show and jumpin' horsey crowd. The latter takes over the Garden early in November, and nobody within reach should miss at least one evening of the resulting exhibition.

Now it takes a singularly cultivated taste to appreciate a lot of five-gaited horses, or a mess of derby-hatted ladies galumphing around the arena in silly little dog-carts. We of the proletariat like to witness the evolutions of the Royal Canadian Cavalry Regiment, which rode here this week, and we get a good felt out of the military jumping—for which our 1938 guests were officers from Canada, Erie, Chili and Mexico. But most of all we go, in our faintly sardonic way, for the exhibitions in the boxes by the horsey folk themselves—or those who just pretend to be from November 5 to 12. Egad, what a horse show they put on.

I wish you could see them, girls—the ladies dressed higher than the Empire State, and the plump and pink-faced gents sporting their shiny toppers all through the show, as tradition demands. And the visiting (who's looking?) and the shrilling and the twittering by the juniors—and three rows to the rear, in ordinary seats, are faithful Jaffers and Jitters and the other grooms who keep the horses sleek and beautiful. Oh, it's a show, kids—and better in the boxes than in the arena, if the gorgeous horsey will kindly pardon me.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—The helpmate squirmed with bitter jealousy a few nights ago as we saw young Doug Fairbanks and the gorgeous Zorina waiting through a wait at the Rainbow Room. Where does that wretch get off? Hall can't wait at all, and if Zorina noticed him at all in a cafe she'd try to check her arm with him. Helen Morgan pops up again to burble her torch songs at Master Billy Rose's mastodon of night clubs, the Casa Manana. And Helen, which rode here this week, the number that really made his ex-wife, Fannie Brice, famous along Broadway years ago. . . . Unimportant fact of the week—Venetian blinds reached Venice from China, whence they were brought by Marco Polo (not Gary Cooper) about 1290. . . . Oddly enough, the makers of my set are the Swedish Venetian Blind Co. Dashed confusion, what? . . .

Watching Fifth Avenue's stores, I note that lovely warm weather of the autumn here caught the merchants with their hangers full of heavy coats and warm suits and frocks—and the unseasonable weather slowed sales to a slow crawl. So it looks as though the fall sales will be pushed up a few dates this year, bringing bargains to the good housewives (and others) earlier than usual. Hard luck.

Your Figure

Sitting Down Gives Figure That 'Settled' Look

By Ida Jean Kain.

WHEN YOU sit most of the time, your figure inevitably acquires a "settled" look that has nothing to do with age. When you find it easier to stay with your figure can be blamed entirely on lazy muscles in the areas of the waist, abdomen, hips and bust, which invite the accumulation of fat.

You would be surprised at the small amount of exercise required to keep these important muscles animated and on the job. You may find it easier to stay with your slimming program if you limit yourself to three or four really effective exercises—but do them every day.

Here is an exercise that is a comfortable version of the cartwheel, but which gets results with those muscles about the midriff.

POSITION: Full length on the floor with the ankles locked. Support the weight on the lower foot and the corresponding hand. Have the arm straight, and the other hand flung back and up.

MOVEMENT: Keeping the body straight and the feet together, turn until you can transfer the weight to the other hand. Don't

Posies Bloom On Costumes At All Hours

By Marshall Adams.

FRESH FLOWERS have joined up with other accessories this season to give women added femininity. How a boutonniere, a corsage or a single blossom may be used to accent ensembles for all hours of the day was demonstrated at a fashion showing this week at the Mayflower Hotel. Flowers were furnished by local florists, clothes by Jelliffe's. Here are some suggestions for the use of posies as gleaned from the showing.

For early morning walks around the block with Fido or little brother, a speckled tweed topcoat might be looked at twice if a wistful little cluster of bachelor buttons or baby chrysanthemums were worn snug under the chin.

On more momentous moments in town, which call for short coat of skunk or some new foolish bushy fur, slip a tailored knob of brilliant astors in the corner of your muff or tie a large beribboned chrysanthemum on your shoulder.

For sinuous black moments, assume a wicked black slipper satin gown, devoid of any straps, save a purple satin pendant choker ending in a streak of amethyst, and in place of jewels, wear festoon of dainty fresh posies.

For out and out luxury seekers, try the rarest of speckled orchids dripping exciting newly developed tones of wine and rust against the elegance of mink. Or, if fluffy fur is preferred, bundle up in knee-deep silvers with an epaulet of camellias, one in white, one pink, one deep scarlet.

And now for the hips.

POSITION: Lie flat on your face on the floor, legs straight down, arms stretched straight out from the sides on the floor.

MOVEMENT: Turn the face to the right and try to bring the right leg up parallel with the right arm. As you do so, you will naturally move the left arm downward. Reverse the position and try to bring the left leg parallel with the left arm, moving the right arm downward. It would be a good idea to use a mat or blanket for floor padding.

"You're not taking off those potatoes already?"
"They're done! Look at this fork!"

"Well, they have to be plenty done when you mash 'em."

"Mash 'em? I was going to make a nice butter sauce with some parsley."

"Oh, well, all right, only Walter always likes 'em mashed."

"I thought he said he was sick of mashed potatoes. However, if you want to mash 'em—"

"Oh, no, go ahead and make the butter sauce—"

"Oh, no, that's all right, we can mash 'em—say, why don't you cut that lettuce crosswise? It goes further."

"Well, everybody cuts it in quarters."

"Well, I know everywhere I go they cut it across. I know Mrs. Minch always cuts hers across. No, this way—"

"Oh, well, I'll just let you do it."

"No, no, you go ahead and do it. Say, have you looked at the roast?"

"I thought you were looking after it."

"Well, I supposed you—oh, I bet it's all burnt—no, it's all right. I'll take it out."

"Wait! don't set it there! I'm saving that place to cut the pie."

"You're not going to cut the pie yet, are you? It'll get all soggy. Say, who looks my fork?"

"Well, this is the same fork I've had—"

"Well, somebody took my fork—oh, here it is. Are you opening that quince jelly?"

"I thought I would. Walter's so crazy about it—"

"I thought he wasn't supposed to eat so much sweets. Anyway if we have the Nutters over tomorrow night—"

"Oh, well, of course as far as I'm concerned we can save it. It was just that I thought Walter—say don't put too much flour in that gravy."

"I'm not. No, go ahead and open the jelly if you want to."

"Oh, no, that's all right, we can save it. Say, you know that gravy was too thick the last time."

"Well, Walter doesn't like it when it's runny."

"Somebody'd better be mashing those potatoes."

"I thought you were going to make a butter sauce."

"No, you said you wanted to mash 'em—"

"It wasn't me. It was just that Walter—say, those peas ought to be taken off—no, don't take that dish! It's for the potatoes."

"Well, I just put it there for the peas. Don't you think that gravy ought to come off?"

"I'm taking it off now—now, who took my gravy bowl?"

"I haven't moved anything—where's my big spoon? Did you take it for the gravy?"

"No, this is my spoon—say, somebody'd better be doing something about the potatoes."

"Well, we haven't got time to mash 'em now."

"Well, why don't we just pour some nice beef gravy over 'em?"

"I think the butter sauce would be nicer—say, who took my parsley?"

"I think Walter'd like gravy sauce. Mrs. Minch always fixes Mr. Minch's potatoes that way."

"I don't think he'd eat it—however, if you want to—"

"No, go ahead with the parsley, it's all right with me. It's just that I thought Walter would rather have the gravy."

"Well, I know he'd rather have the butter and parsley—oh, there he comes! Let's ask him."

"Right, Oh, Walter—"

"Oh, Walter—"

Etiquette Gives Grown-up Poise

WHAT a contrast between Peggy and Sue! Peggy's smooth manners win bids to all the proms and big football games. But awkward Sue has to depend on her brother to take her places.

Peggy knows just what to do when Jack asks for a dance while she sits out one with Ted. She knows it's incorrect to leave a sit-out date, so she smilingly refuses.

Such little problems leave Sue floundering awkwardly. When she has no partner, off she starts to the dressing-room, walking across the dance floor alone—which just isn't done. If Sue were a clever girl, she'd get back in circulation by joining friends.

So easy to be sure of yourself when you know little etiquette points. Invited to college for a football week-end, do you wonder who pays for what? You pay your train fare there and your hotel bill. Your date pays for your football ticket, taxis and dinners.

And when he takes you to dinner, don't choose filet mignon with mushrooms—if you know his allowance is slim. Better to say, "I'll have breaded veal cutlet."

On the street don't grasp a man's arm and hang on for dear life. Remember, he'll offer his arm if you need help.

And if you want to show your appreciation for a movie treat don't crudely say, "Thank you" to your beau; say instead, "I had such a pleasant time."

Don't guess about etiquette! Let our 40-page booklet, "Etiquette for the Teens," give you social poise with tips on dancing, dating, dining, motoring, telephone etiquette.

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, "Etiquette for the Teens," to The Washington Post Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

Count Potocki Gives Annual Party To Mark Polish Independence

Ambassador Receives With Mme. Wankowicz
Senator and Mrs. Vandenberg There
Also Mrs. Woodring and Mrs. Roper

The fact Armistice Day coincided with Poland's Independence Day gave the Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki, a double-barreled excuse for a party yesterday afternoon at the Embassy.

One new touch to the annual party was the beautiful mural in the dining room recently completed by Professor Jan de Rosen, distinguished Polish artist. It depicts King John the Third, who won great Polish victories against the Turks, astride a white charger, and in the background there is Pilsudski's figure on horseback. The picture is supposed to represent the meeting of two epochs. Professor Rosen, who is doing the painting for Poland's exhibit at the World's Fair, came down for yesterday's party.

Mme. Wankowicz, wife of the Counselor of the Embassy, received with the Ambassador in the drawing room at the head of the stairs. She wore a floor-length gown of black crepe ornamented with a corsage of camellias and a pearl necklace.

There was everything to drink from champagne to deliciously ice orange juice. The tea was particularly in demand, with its delicate jasmine flavor. The dining room table was centered with a bouquet of red roses and white daisies in a silver bowl.

Mrs. Leiter Attends Fete

A number of people who have just returned to Washington added a refreshing touch to the party. Popular Senator and Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg were surrounded by friends wanting to welcome them back after their long absence at their summer home in Michigan.

Mrs. Joseph Leiter, in a red costume with furs, was also present, having recently returned from her summer home in Massachusetts and a brief stay at Hot Springs, Va. The dining room was crowded yesterday, but many guests established themselves in the smaller drawing rooms which open one into another, making the embassy ideal for entertaining purposes. Vases of white lilies were placed here and there, adding to the general effect of elegance.

The Ambassador had hospitably invited a large cross-section of Capital society to help him celebrate, and there were several hundred people present. Mrs. Daniel C. Roper and Mrs. Harry H. Woodring were "cabinet wives" present. The former was in black with a silver fox scarf, and Mrs. Woodring looked even more chic than usual in a heather-colored wool suit, with narrow fur trimming on the lapels, and a shako hat.

Mrs. Sumner Welles wore a blue fox cape over her black dress.

Argentine Envoy At Party

The Argentine Ambassador came without Mme. Espil, who is out of town until Monday. The French Ambassador, Count Rene de Saint Quentin; the British envoy, Sir Ronald Lindsay; the Finnish Minister and Mme. Jasterly; the Swedish Minister and Mme. Bostrom; and the Latvian Minister and Mme. Bilmanis were other ranking members of the Diplomatic Corps present.

Mrs. Demarest Lloyd, in a sable jacket and smart hat trimmed in blue, sat on a sofa surrounded by gentlemen. Mrs. Bowler Hull was another very stunning person there, in grey with a scarf of saffron.

Bristols Among Those Present

Rear Admiral and Mrs. Mark Bristol were as usual the center of a group, and Mrs. John Caswell was surrounded by admirers. The Immigration Commissioner and Mrs. J. L. Houghteling, Mrs. John R. Williams, Mrs. Walter R. Tucker and the Misses Laura and Alice Tuckerman were others present.

Countess van Rechteren Limburg, one of the smartest women there, wore a brown suit trimmed with reddish fur and a little fur muff to match. Mr. and Mrs. van Troostenburg de Bruyn and Mr. and Mrs. B. Klein Molekamp were others present from the Netherlands Legation.

Miss Florence Harris, in a stunning silver fox cape over her black frock; Miss Carolyn Chantry, Miss Dolly Corbin and Miss Diana Rowland were among members of the younger set present.

Miss Helen Davis was chic in a red jacket trimmed with black fur over her dress.

Others seen were Mrs. George T. Pettigill, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Encinos, Ralph Snowden Hill, Kemper Simpson, Mme. Babes of the Rumanian Legation, Mrs. Ronald Macdonnell with Mrs. Willem Naude, the First Secretary of the German Embassy and Frau Scholz, Dr. and Mrs. Frank Bohn, Sherlock Davis, Clement Conger, pretty Mrs. Marion Warburg and many others.

Marlers Attend Armistice Ball In New York

The Canadian Minister and Lady Marler attended the Armistice ball given last evening at the Hotel Astor by the New York branch of the British Legion, the British Great War Veterans of America, Inc. The Marlers will return to Washington today.

Capt. L. C. A. St. J. Curzon-Howe, Naval Attaché of the British Embassy, was also among the guests.

Envoy Heads Sponsors' List

The Ambassador of Great Britain, Sir Ronald Lindsay, heads the list of sponsors for the present season of the motion picture programs of the Film Society of Washington.

The society, which was organized here last season, features the private showing of motion picture programs and has a large membership of film lovers. This season is showing a great increase of members since the announcement of the varied and fascinating Wednesday evening programs to be presented at Pierce Hall.

The first program will open Wednesday evening with a showing of "The Adventures of Chico." Sponsors for the present season include: The Ambassador of Argentina, Felipe Espil; The Ambassador of Mexico, Francisco Castillo Najera; The Ambassador of Germany, Hans Heinrich Dieckhoff; The Ambassador of France, Chateau de Saint Quentin; the Ambassador of China, Dr. Hu-Shih, and the Minister of Denmark, Otto Wadsted.

Many other prominent Washingtonians are included in the list of 1933-34 sponsors of the Film Society, to which membership is open through application to the offices of the society of which Robert Lincoln O'Brien is chairman; Admiral Mark Bristol, treasurer, and Miss Matilda Young, secretary.

She will leave for Cincinnati tomorrow.

Miss Myrtle Washington Gunter and Warren Harding Viar, both of Madison Heights, Va., were married November 5 by the Rev. G. C. Looney.

The wedding will take place during the Christmas season.

The bride is the former Miss Jane Baar Celler, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Emanuel Celler, of Brooklyn. Mr. Wertheimer is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Wertheimer, of New York City.

The ceremony took place in the Crystal Garden of the Ritz-Carlton, the Rev. Isaac Landman, of Brooklyn, officiating. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a princess gown of white satin trimmed with lace and embroidered at the neck with seed pearls. Her veil of tulle and satin was draped from a Juliet cap and she carried a Bible with a marker of orchids and lilies of the valley.

Miss Judith Celler was maid of honor for her sister. She was attended in white tulle and wore autumn flowers in her hair. The bridesmaids were the Misses Rena and Amy Wertheimer, twin sisters of the bridegroom, whose costumes were of green velvet. They also carried autumn flowers.

Arline and Arthur Baar, twin cousins of the bride, were flower girl and page, respectively.

Gilbert Helman was best man for Mr. Wertheimer. Ushers were William White, Robert Lewis, Edward Baker, Ralph Jacobs, Mortimer Herskivits and Raymond Frisch.

A reception followed the ceremony.

Miss Alma Kisch, On Lecture Tour, Visits Capital

Miss Alma Kisch, niece of Sir Cecil Kisch, British Undersecretary of State for India, is spending the week-end at the Roosevelt. She is making a lecture tour on housing conditions and slum clearance in England.

Miss Kisch, one of the few women in Great Britain engaged in an active career along these lines, has lectured in all the European capitals in French, English and German. She is a member of the Chartered Surveyors' Institution and was the first woman to win the Chartered Surveyors' post graduate scholarship for research at Cambridge University.

She will leave for Cincinnati tomorrow.

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

MARTA TRUCCO will serve as maid of honor for her sister Rebecca when the latter is married November 28 to Robert Almy Knowlton. Invitations have been issued for the ceremony which will take place at 4 p. m. at the Chilean Embassy in the presence of relatives and close friends.

The bride-to-be will leave for New York shortly to select a wedding dress and trousseau.

Frank W. Knowlton will come from Boston to serve as his brother's best man and ushers will include the Counselor of the embassy, Sergio Huneau; Manuel Trucco, brother of the future bride; Joao de Deus Ramos of the Portuguese Legation; Thomas Adams of Washington; Robert Peet, of New York, a brother of Creighton Peet of this city; James Kilbreth, also of New York, and William Perry.

Miss Trucco is the daughter of the Chilean Ambassador, Manuel Trucco.

TWO INTERESTING visitors to Washington, scheduled to arrive Monday, are Viscountess Mersey, of England, and her son, the Honorable John Bigham. They will be guests of Clarence Hayes at his residence on Massachusetts avenue northwest. Two years ago Mr. Hayes entertained another son of Lady Mersey, the Honorable Edward Bigham, and his wife, the Lady Catherine Bigham, who were here for about two weeks at Thanksgiving time and were widely feted during their stay.

This is the first visit of Lady Mersey to this country. She is in New York at present and will sail back to England November 18.

LADY MERSEY is the former Miss Mary Seymour, daughter of Lady Seymour and the late Sir Horace Seymour. Her husband has held many important public positions and at one time was in the diplomatic service, having been stationed at Peking and Constantinople and at Leningrad when that city was Petrograd. She and her husband have a house on Eaton Square, in London, and a country place, Bignor Park, in Sussex.

Before visiting New York the titled visitors traveled in Canada.

JACQUES TRUCCO, Counselor of the French Embassy, will sail today on the S. S. Normandie for a two-month holiday in France. He expects to return in January.

SEEN AT THE HEIGHTS-HO the other evening: Caroline Cecil, in a becoming black evening gown, with Thomas Adams . . . Shing Whiney, down from New York on business . . . Emily Davis at a table for two, wearing a smart black suit and a black hat trimmed with leopard . . . Eleanor Peck, daughter of the chairman of the Home Owners Loan Corporation, twirling about the floor with Bill Coyle . . . New Dealer Willis Ballinger with an out-of-town friend.

MARY PICKFORD, who now is concentrating on cosmetics and peace, will address the Women's National Press Club on the latter subject at its Tuesday luncheon. Some of the members say they'd rather hear her talk on love and lollons.

PARTY NOTES: The Assistant Naval Attaché of the British Embassy and Mrs. Coleby are asking a few friends to dine before the next Friday Supper Club meeting, November 18 . . . Commander and Mrs. John Magruder have cards out for Tuesday afternoon from 5 to 7 . . . Marquis Benedetto Capomazza will entertain a week from today at cocktails for Rebecca Trucco and her fiancé, Robert Knowlton . . . Mr. and Mrs. Barry Brown will give a cocktail party next Sunday at their apartment, 1835 Phelps place. They are two very attractive newcomers to Washington. Mr. Brown is a nephew of Maj. David Barry, of Washington, and has a job here with a magazine owned by his father, Sevelon Brown, of Providence.

Mrs. McGoodwin Gives Luncheon

Senor Dies de Medina was the guest in whose honor Mrs. Preston McGoodwin entertained at luncheon yesterday at the Hay-Adams House. The McGoodwin suite was decorated with gladioli and snapdragons. The centerpiece on the table was of giant chrysanthemums of autumn shade of honey and deep henna, which were reflected in the large mirror under the flower bowl.

The hostess was garbed in an amber shade of duveten velvet with a matching hat and accessories.

Among the guests were Senora de Becerra, wife of the Guatemalan Minister, at whose legation Senora de Medina is a house guest; Senora de Castro, wife of the Minister of El Salvador; Senora de Pastoria, wife of the Minister of the Dominican Republic; Senora de Caceres, wife of the Charge d'Affaires of Honduras; Mme. Babes, wife of the Counselor of Rumania; Senora de Vargas, wife of the Secretary for the Colombian Legation; Senora de Fuentes, wife of the Secretary of the Mexican Embassy; Senora de Campbell, wife of the Commercial Attaché of the Chilean Embassy; Senora de Lecuna, wife of the Attaché of the Venezuelan Legation; Mrs. James A. Morran, Mrs. William F. O'Donnell, Senora Hercolia Urrutia, Mrs. Frederick Benton and Mrs. Benjamin D. Hill.

Vienna Choir Boys Will Be Feted

Dr. Hans Kindler will entertain the Vienna Choir Boys, guest artists at tomorrow's concert of the National Symphony Orchestra, at a party following the concert in the Queen Elizabeth room of the Hotel Raleigh. Thirty boys composing the Glee Club of Elliot Junior High School and their director, Miss Hannah Bonnell, will also be guests of Dr. Kindler. The Vienna Choir Boys are at the Raleigh.

Club to Fete Visitor From England

Will Be Tea Guest
Is Housing Expert
On Speaking Tour
Soroptimists Host

By Jessie Ash Arndt

Miss Alma Roylston-Kisch, who was "25 just the other day" and is here lecturing on alum clearance and low-cost housing, will be guest of honor today at a tea being given by the Soroptimist Club at the Carlton Hotel. Miss Roylston-Kisch is a member of Central London Soroptimist Club, also is one of 20 women among 8,000 members of the Chartered Surveyors' Institution, and is practically the only woman member who appears on the programs of the International Housing and Town Planning Association.

She finds work in her field an uphill career in England because of the prevalent opinion that it is one which belongs to men. "That notion is all nonsense," she asserted with characteristic directness. "Women are accepted as being people to run the home and they should devote their knowledge with the aid of technical training to housing work for which they have a natural aptitude."

Miss Roylston-Kisch was head of Roedean School for Girls in Brighton, and then entered the College of Estate Management, where she was at that time the only woman student. She learned there road-making, engineering, sanitation and drainage, architecture, field surveying, leveling, economics, estate accountancy and laws relating to landlords and tenants. Following this she was awarded the Chartered Surveyors' post graduate scholarship for research in housing at Cambridge University. She was the first woman to receive it and also the first person at Cambridge to carry on research in low-cost housing for agricultural workers.

Lectures on Housing In European Capitals

She has studied projects in nearly every European capital under the supervision of the housing authorities and is now in this country for the purpose of lecturing on these and at the same time studying those of American cities. Although the United States began its alum clearance and housing projects after some of the European countries, it has profited by their mistakes and is making rapid progress, in Miss Roylston-Kisch's opinion.

This is her first visit to America but "it won't be my last, I promise you I like it so well, I could spend all my life here," she declared. She gave lectures and radio broadcasts in New York, Philadelphia and Atlantic City before coming here, and will address the Soroptimists at the tea in her honor today. She will remain in Washington until Wednesday, staying at the Roosevelt Hotel, and plans to inspect local housing projects and visit Greenbelt. An exhibition devoted to American housing is being prepared at the housing center in London for which she is a member of the public committee. Material for the display is being supplied by the United States Housing Authority.

To Visit Cities In Middle West

Wednesday Miss Roylston-Kisch will fly to Richmond, going from there to Cincinnati, on to Chicago and returning to Pittsburgh and Boston for lecture engagements. She is speaking before Rotary and Kiwanis clubs, architectural societies and social agencies.

The English visitor, despite her attainments in what is customarily a masculine field, is a feminine young person with other interests than research. Horseback riding is one of them and she was up at 6:30 yesterday morning for a ride along the Potomac bridge path. She is a niece of Sir Cecil Kirsh, British Undersecretary of State for India, Sir David Davis, former Lord Mayor of Birmingham, and of Sir Philip Harthog, noted educator.

Zontians to Hear Mrs. McIntire

Mrs. Ross T. McIntire will be the speaker at the luncheon of the Zonta Club at the Y. W. C. A. Wednesday. Mrs. McIntire is actively engaged in promoting the benefit to be given on Thanksgiving Eve for the National Library for the Blind. This will be a midnight preview of "The Citadel," heralded as one of the most powerful film plays of the season.

The National Library for the Blind employs, in addition to a permanent staff of blind workers, a number of blind transcribers who reproduce in Braille books and other reading matter. Although paid for at only a few cents a page, Braille is an expensive process, being done entirely by hand. It is in order to raise money to employ more blind workers that this benefit is being planned. Mrs. McIntire will outline in some detail to the Zontians the unique work of this library, which serves about 2,000 blind readers. Twenty-eight new names were added in October, and so far in November 24 more have applied.

To Present Chinese Wedding

Principals in the old-fashioned Chinese wedding to be given in pantomime Thursday and Friday at the Chinese Bazaar are (left to right), Miss Mabel Kwong, as the bride; Miss Lois Ling, as the maid of honor; and Stanley K. W. Chen, the bridegroom. The bazaar, sponsored by the Chinese Women's Association for its relief fund, will be held at the Textile Museum, 2330 S street

Bazaar Slated For China Relief

A Chinese wedding in pantomime will be a feature of the program to be presented each afternoon and evening at the bazaar to be sponsored, Thursday and Friday of this week by the Chinese Women's Association for the benefit of Chinese war relief. Through the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. George Hewitt Myers, the bazaar will be held at the Textile Museum, 2330 S street.

It will be open from 2:30 to 10 p. m. each day and the program will be at 4:30 in the afternoon and 8:30 in the evening. The Textile Museum will be converted into an Oriental mart for the occasion and Chinese women in their native robes will be assisted by American friends in selling the wares. There will be articles of all kinds, including embroidery, hand-drawn silk, wood and ivory pieces and Chinese prints and paintings.

The affair will be the first of a series being planned this season by the association, for the war relief fund. Mrs. J. Y. Yee is president; Mrs. Paul Tsai, vice president; Mrs. V. K. Kwong, secretary, and Mrs. Y. S. Leong, treasurer. Others on the committee for the bazaar are: Mrs. C. C. Hung, Mrs. C. G. Wy and Mrs. Pu Hsiao.

A group of Washington girls assisting includes: Miss Sybella Clayton, chairman, and the Misses Laurabell Wyatt, Eula Council, Randolph Richardson, Genevieve March, Gail Kozak, Hazel Schmid and Marie-Gay Owen.

Bedtime Story

The Dictator
Be ready for your own to fight, But recognize another's right.
—Jimmy Skunk.

Jimmy Skunk was somewhat upset. Long ago he had a hole that allowed him to go in under the floor of part of Aunt Sally's house. It was a handy place to go for a nap after a hearty meal. At such times he always felt too lazy to travel far, and under the house it was dark, dry, cool in summer and warm in winter. So Jimmy and members of his family had used it frequently. After Bobby Coon and his family had begun visiting, Sally's Woodhouse Night Club they too had often sought this convenient shelter between meals. It was very handy. They never had any trouble with Jimmy. Perhaps he understood that they were there merely for the time being.

But now the situation had changed. Bobby Coon, Mrs. Bobby and five children nearly as large as their parents were there to stay. At least that is the way Jimmy took the situation to be judging from the actions of the two young Coons who had taken possession of his favorite corner and until their mother had intervened had acted as if they intended to fight for it. Lucky youngsters that mother was at hand!

"They didn't mean any harm," apologized Mrs. Bobby. "On yes they did," retorted Jimmy. "Of course they couldn't have done any harm as you very well know, but they intended to try. What are you all doing here anyway?"

Madame Chairman

By Suzanne.

MINNIE FROST RANDS, drama chairman of the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs, has published in book form her play, "The Prince of Peace," which will be presented this winter by groups representing various women's organizations in the city.

The story-drama in ten episodes was given at the Sylvan Theater last summer, but because of the rainy weather which interfered with so many of the season's programs did not have the large audiences which would otherwise have attended. Mrs. Rands, who is the wife of Dr. R. D. Rands, plant pathologist of the United States Department of Agriculture, is following the tradition of her family in her interest in religion, for she is descended, on her mother's side, from Robert Hunt, rector of the first Protestant Church in America, founded in Jamestown in 1607. The play is a study of political, social and economic conditions existing in Palestine in Jesus' time. It is written without denominational prejudice and is designed as a plea for international peace, religious unity, racial accord and civic righteousness.

DOLLS will hold the center of the stage Tuesday at a benefit event sponsored by the Clarendon Women's Club, in Mount Olivet Church, Sixteenth street and Glebe road. There will be an exhibition of world-wide collection of dolls and lectures on them both afternoon and evening by Mrs. Virginia Woodin, of Clarendon. The program and exhibition will be from 4 to 6 and from 8 to 10 p. m. In addition to Mrs. Woodin's collection of dolls, there will be one with entries open to the public in which a prize will be awarded for the unique doll and for the most attractive.

Mrs. W. D. Marshall, vice president of the club, is acting for Mrs. Claude Thomas, the president, who is ill. THE ARLINGTON WOMAN'S CLUB has arranged a guest night program Monday, under the direction of Mrs. J. B. Lowell, State chairman of American citizenship. Miss Hazel Neilson will speak. The announcement of the meeting says members are asked to "come and bring their friends, especially husbands."

Mrs. Lawrence Tuttle has announced the home department will have a luncheon and business meeting Thursday at the Goodwin Industries, 1218 New Hampshire avenue. "THE OLD PARIS COACHMAN," given last season at Montmartre Noctambule, will be repeated tonight and another added for good measure. The second skit will be a French-English piece, "The Pedler," under the direction of Felian Garza.

THE NATIONAL PARK ALUMNAE of Washington will be guests of Mrs. W. E. Springer, 18 West Lenox street, Chevy Chase, Md., at a tea Monday. Assistant hostesses will be Mrs. Charles Wolcott, Mrs. Mae Little McGinnis and Mrs. Charles Camilleri.

THE ARMY-NAVY CHAPTER of the D. A. R. will meet for luncheon Monday at the Army and Navy Club, with Gen. Charles R. Howland, retired, as speaker. Mrs. George R. Harrison is regent of the chapter; Mrs. John L. Homer, vice regent; Mrs. George M. Grimes, chaplain; Mrs. John E. Hunt, recording secretary; Mrs. Hubert E. Paddock, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Frank S. Clark, treasurer; Mrs. George W. McIver, registrar, and Mrs. George J. Newgarden, historian.

Working For Washington Child Roundup Work Increases a Fourth

1,000 Examined in Summer Recently Ended
Pre-School Physical Tests Arranged
Mrs. Alma Hudson Is Chairman

By Christine Sadler

While most Washington committees are taking their summer rest on year, women of the "roundup" committee of the District Congress of Parents and Teachers work hard rounding up children who are to enter school in the fall and encouraging parents to get them in good physical condition for the new period in their lives.

If the health check-up is made far enough in advance, Mrs. Alma Hudson, chairman of the committee, points out, school absences are cut considerably and children are able to enter school as well pupils, "ready to learn."

Tonsils and adenoids are the big bugaboos of childhood, the round-ups reveal. Many eye defects are uncovered, hearing defects, malnutrition and dental needs. The District leads the Nation in the good teeth of its school children, Mrs. Hudson and her committee members feel that the summer round-ups may have helped in bringing that about.

"We examine the 4 and 5-year-olds, keeping records. This year, for the first time, these will become a part of the regular school health record of each child," she says. "All doctors and nurses volunteer services for this work. Members of the committee contact the parents in their neighborhoods and sell them on the idea of making the check-up in the summer."

"If the parents are unable to have needed medical work done, the committee members secure clinical service for them. While this work is going on we attempt to get the mothers convinced of the need for regular periodical health examinations for their children."

In the summer just ended, committees from 51 schools sponsored roundup examinations in which 1,000 children were checked. This represented an increase of more than 200 children over the number examined the summer before. Eventually, the committee hopes, every preschool child will receive an examination and neighborhood doctors will make them.

The summer roundup idea was conceived by the local Parent-Teacher group in 1925 and its work has grown each year. Mrs. Hudson is serving her second term as District chairman. She was local chairman for the Kenilworth unit for seven years previously.

Has Four Children,
Two Graduated
She is the mother of four children, two of whom have been graduated from high school, and is an active member of the Kenilworth Recreation Council.

"A feature of our work now is the emphasis we are placing on the need for diphtheria immunization. We have made definite headway, but there is much yet to be done. We hope that eventually the immunization will be 100 per cent complete," Mrs. Hudson says.

"Our whole health program we visualize as a means of drawing the home and school and neighborhood closer together and making them see their problems often are one."

Mrs. Charles R. Reynolds, wife of the Surgeon General, is medical department representative on the board of the D. C. branch of the society, of which Mrs. William R. Smedberg, Jr., is president. Mrs. Wallace DeWitt, wife of the commanding officer of the Army Medical Center, is general chairman of arrangements for the dance and carnival, assisted by subcommittees of various committees. Mrs. Alva B. McKie is in charge of the reception; Mrs. Earle D. Quinell, games; Mrs. Henry V. Coburn, refreshments, with Mrs. Howard McC. Snyder as co-chairman; Mrs. Leigh C. Fairbanks, chairman of tickets, and Mrs. Harold W. Jones, of publicity.

The event is open to the general public and is an occasion at which many of the Army officers and their wives entertain parties and friends. The tea dance is also popular with members of the younger service clubs.

This year Mrs. Coburn, as chairman of refreshments, has announced that these are included in the price of the tickets. Last year this was not understood by all who attended and in consequence much of the homemade cake which had been donated went begging.

There will be a variety of games at the carnival, including golf putting, ring-in-a-ring, disc and dart throwing and a shooting gallery.

The Army Relief Society was founded in 1900. Officers of the District of Columbia Branch, in addition to Mrs. Smedberg, are Mrs. Walter L. Finley, Mrs. Stanley B. Embick, Mrs. Julian L. Schley, Mrs. DeWitt and Mrs. Harry LaT. Cavanaugh, vice presidents; Mrs. Ernest Graves, secretary, and Brig. Gen. Smedberg, treasurer.

It Can't Happen Here

- Put YOUR children in this picture. Put their backs against a wall—and turn the blinding fury of Social Cruelty, Indifference and Neglect, into their faces.
- Then ask yourself what chance they'd have to fight life's battle and come out near the top?
- Actually these kiddies need your help — not just for today, but for all the days and years ahead. That's why your Community Chest has made itself responsible for the care and up-bringing of thousands of these helpless waifs, who, but for your generosity, will be left to face life's battle alone.
- We can't fail them. We mustn't let them down. It just can't happen here.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

South Bend, Ind., Nov. 11. Tomorrow may bring pain and disillusionment to Notre Dame men throughout the land, but tonight Knute Rockne is entitled to look down from Valhalla and say of Elmer Layden: "He learned well. It is such a Notre Dame team as I would have prescribed."

Because when Notre Dame takes the field against Minnesota tomorrow at Rockne Stadium, South Bend's shrine to "Rock," the Irish will carry onto the gridiron a record unblemished by defeat or tie. It will be labeled as the team that has been Notre Dame's greatest since Rockne swirled to his death out of Kansas skies in a fouled transport plane, May, 1931.

Notre Dame, on the brink of another unbeaten season, hopes to make of its Minnesota game tomorrow, a victory offering to "Rock." Unless guesses are missed, that will be the tenor of Coach Layden's pre-game speech to his athletes, because the memory of Rockne is something sacred in South Bend.

If you do not think that memory is profound and reverential, you should have heard Layden, Rockne's pupil, in a fanfare at South Bend earlier in the week when the suggestion was made that his reverse plays were unlike the famed Rockne reverses.

"That is not true," snapped Layden. And then as if any departure from the Rockne system were a moral sin, he added: "You shouldn't say that. My reverses are Rock's reverses. The Rockne system is good enough for us." Rockne's 1924 left halfback—one of his famed four horsemen—was emphatic.

Reel Off the Records

Here in South Bend they rattle off the records of Rockne's teams as if they were parts of the catechism. They go far back to 1913 to tell you how many passes "Rock" caught from Gus Dorais, to beat Army in that memorable game and they relate the feats of Gipp, Caridee, Savoldi, Schwarz, Flanagan, O'Brien and seven mules with a gloss that approaches the fanatical.

They never will believe here at Notre Dame that college football would ever make a touchdown to Rockne if rival coaches had not outwitted him at the rules meetings and legislated the Rockne shift out of the book. And they point to success of the Rockne balanced line formations even in an era when they are generally considered obsolete.

Not until Rockne came along with his shock troops and proved the effectiveness of wholesale substitutions did the idea suggest itself to college football. And, not until Rockne took his team from coast to coast on alternate weeks was it supposed that a group of young boys could keyed to a high competitive pitch no matter what the conditions.

Of Rockne they used to say that he neglected the field goal, passed up opportunities to win by three points when he was in scoring territory, but "Rock" had his own ideas on that point. "Sticks," he would say, the team that can make a touchdown in scoring territory isn't the kind of a team I want. Devising scoring plays is up to the coach."

Rockne gave to football a new kind of strategy, not only with his shock troops, his ideological pep talks and his forward passing attack that was ahead of his time. He played the psychology of football to the hilt. There was, for example, that game with Navy at Baltimore Stadium, back in 1928, I think.

Flanagan Was Everywhere

Navy had held the Irish to 0-0 in that first half, but with the second-half kickoff, Rockne sent into the game his star, Christie Flanagan. Eight times in succession he carried the ball. It was Flanagan through the middle, Flanagan off the tackles, Flanagan around the end. Never did he score fewer than 5 yards. And then with a first down on Navy's 3-yard line, the Rockne influence was felt again.

Rockne's Navy defense was shattered at the goal intent on blocking Flanagan this time. And Flanagan, who had been cold at the line of scrimmage, but Flanagan had simply faked handing the ball to Flanagan, withdrew it, and calmly trotted around end as Flanagan, carrying out the ruse, hit the Navy line.

Throughout the land, Rockne's system of football lines, perpetuated by his pupils of Notre Dame, lives at Alabama, where the coach is Frank Thomas, one of his seven mules. At Washington State, where Jim Phelan is head coach. At Michigan State, where Charley Bachman is in command; at Wisconsin, where Harry Stuhldreier is a senior, and at Villanova, where Clipper Smith reigns. That, however, is only a partial list of Rockne's coaching pupils. Jim Crowley, you know, is at Fordham.

As Rockne's eye sweeps the football scene he can take pride in the perpetuation of Rockne football. But he will be some special sort of pride that he will receive for Elmer Layden at South Bend tomorrow, perhaps.

South Bend, Ind., Nov. 11.—Poised at the crest of their happiest football campaign since 1930, Notre Dame's Irish take off tomorrow on another adventure that will (1) send Rose Bowl dreams crashing or (2) lift Notre Dame football to new modern heights.

Athwart the path of the unbeaten, untied Irish is their highest hurdle of the season thus far, a badly stung Minnesota team that is spoiling for victory tomorrow. Their own national championship hope punctured by a defeat by Northwestern two weeks ago, the vengeful Gophers tomorrow will be cast in the role of wreckers.

Into South Bend tonight rolled the advance guard of the 56,000 homecoming Notre Dame folks, high hoping travelers from Minnesota and unaffiliated football fans drawn to Rockne Stadium by the game that transcends all others on the nationwide football program this week.

Irish 7-5 Favorites.

Notre Dame's backfield vs. Minnesota's line. That is the contest as the cognoscenti view it, and the betting is 7 to 5 that the Irish ball players will prevail at the end of 60 minutes of action.

This Notre Dame team, coached by Elmer Layden, pupil of the late Knute Rockne, is hailed as the best South Bend football product since Rockne's last unit, in view of victories over Kansas, Georgia Tech, Carnegie, Army and Navy. With a set of running and passing backs acclaimed as the near equal of Rockne's best, the Irish have unfailingly produced a last-half punch this season. With Harry Stevenson, Bob Saggau, Joe Thesing, Lou Zoni and Bennie Sheridan moving the ball, Notre Dame has emerged as a first-class football power of 1938.

There was one distressing note today, however. Sophomore Sheridan, hero of the victory over Army, was suffering from a bruised foot, and was deemed unlikely to see action against the Gophers.

With Notre Dame will lie the advantage in reserves both in the backfield and the line, but Minnesota's first-string line is rated superior to the Irish forward wall by Western critics. The ease with which Army proceeded down field through the Irish line at Yankee Stadium was no less than alarming.

Gophers' Stock Rises

Minnesota stock has rocketed with the announcement that Harold Van Every, Bernie Bierman's forward punting specialist and widely known opportunist would be operating behind the Gophers' line tomorrow. Van Every has recovered from injuries which kept him idle during much of the season.

Larry Buhler and Wilbur Moore are the other chief offensive threats of the Gophers, with Buhler's line cracking and Moore against the Irish with a passing attack.

As long as he can keep his first team on the field Coach Bernie Bierman believes he will have the edge over Notre Dame in its other major encounters, but paradoxically, the Admirals outgained almost all of their opponents. A scoring punch was lacking against Yale, Penn and Notre Dame, all of which Navy succeeded in backing up in their own territory throughout a large portion of the afternoon.

Columbia is not noted for its running attack, but rather a potent overhead game that eats up yardage at 25 and 50-yard gulps. The source of the aerial game is found in the spring-like right arm of Sid Luckman, hailed by critics as the passing marvel of the year. Luckman did not face Virginia last week, which led to the startling disclosure that Columbia is not a one-man team. It can run the ball when the occasion demands running rather than passing.

Navy will be bolstered by the return of Edmund (Burr) Wood, a stocky fullback, who, admittedly, is the best ground gainer on the squad. Wood's absence in the Notre Dame contest was painfully conspicuous.

Henry Wacker Kayos Bow Tow in Sixth

Chicago, Nov. 11 (AP)—Henry Wacker, Taylorville, Ill., Negro, scored his sixth straight knockout victory tonight by flooring Bob Tow, 204, of Alexandria, Va., in the sixth round of their scheduled eight-round main event at this city.

Tow had gone down for a two count in the second, but came back to stagger Wacker in the next round. Wacker weighed 194.

Baugh Picks Gophers To Upset Irishmen

By "Slinging" Sammy Baugh
Forward Passing Champion National Football League.

By nightfall I may be as wrong as the folks who made War Admiral a 1-to-4 favorite against Seabiscuit, but this morning I have a well-defined hunch that Notre Dame will be missing a key player in the list of unbeaten and untied teams.

The Irish are the favorites to beat Minnesota at South Bend this afternoon, but I am looking for an upset. I'm picking the Gophers to win, although I'm not silly enough to attempt to predict the score. Picking football winners is tough enough. Attempting to predict the actual score is foolhardy.

One reason I favor Minnesota is that I believe the Gophers will be at their best for this game. Their defeat by Northwestern a

Lions Favored Over Middies

Clash in New York

Bullet Wood Back

By Lewis F. Atchison.

New York, Nov. 11.—Navy's varsity gridmen, a hardy band of young stalks, rested tonight in a quiet retreat on the outskirts of this thriving village, dreaming perhaps, of tomorrow's Lion hunt, and possibly their first major victory of the ebullient campaign.

It is the Middle vs. Columbia tonight, a thrilling game, and a bruising, thrilling game is confidently expected. Forty thousand fans, all the stadium will accommodate, are expected to see the old rivals renew their bitter feud.

In cold, black print Lou Little's well groomed machine figures to have a slight edge on Hank Hardwick's crew, for the Lions have the better record of the two. Columbia beat Yale, Army, and last Saturday Virginia. It lost to Colgate, 12-0, and to Penn by a single point, 14-13.

Navy dropped a 9-7 decision to Yale, fought Penn to a scoreless stalemate and wallowed Virginia. It was every man for himself in the struggle for the hand-some trophy donated by Alfred B. MacKay. On the first round each of the countries represented, except Cuba, had at least one horse with a clean performance.

King Hi, ridden by Capt. Royce A. Drake, of the United States; Roxana, ridden by Lieut. Douglas Cleland, of Canada; Donaji, ridden by Capt. Armando Alberrell, of Mexico; Duhallo, ridden by Capt. Daniel J. Corry, of Ireland; Dakota, ridden by Lieut. Franklin F. Wing, of the United States; and Azteca, ridden by Lieut. Ramiro Palafox, of Mexico.

The jump was for the running attack, but rather a potent overhead game that eats up yardage at 25 and 50-yard gulps. Asteca Steals Show

Then Azteca came quietly trotting into the ring. The brown gelding was as calm and serene as a Sunday morning, but his rider, Lieut. Palafox, as indicated by the grim set of his face, was keyed up to a supreme effort. Over the road sign they went, then cleared the Oxer, the pole over brush and the hog's back. The in-and-out was the ordeal for Azteca. Over the in of the 4½-foot alanted poles he sailed, and with but two strides leaped the 5-foot single rail.

The crowd, sensing a possible clean performance, was on its feet and cheering the gallant horse and rider. Azteca cleared the double rustic gate and then came on to face the hazardous striped bank with painted poles looming 5½ feet in the air. Suddenly a hush settled over the great audience, and in the silence Azteca went up and over with a hoof touching the wall.

Then pandemonium broke loose in the Garden and Lieut. Palafox and his game mount received a greater ovation than that accorded them by last night's crowd. It was a deserved tribute paid to a magnificent horse and an intrepid rider.

Capt. Drake and Capt. Corry flipped a coin for second place. Capt. Corry won the toss and his mount, Duhallo, took the second ribbon. King Hi was in third place, and the old campaigner, Dakota, won the fourth award.

Cinelli Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Untermyer's high-jumping black gelding proved himself very much a champion tonight by defeating the ribbon winners of the knockdown-and-

Madison Square Garden, New York, Nov. 11.—That noble bit of dynamite, the great Azteca, star performer of the Mexican team, ridden by Lieut. Ramiro Palafox, repeated his spectacular victory of last night by winning the feature event of the seventh day of the National Horse Show at Madison Square Garden.

The 18,000 spectators leaped to their feet and madly cheered the splendid brown gelding as he won the trophy for individual military championship for officers who competed in the International Military Team Championship.

Team spirit was abandoned tonight. It was every man for himself in the struggle for the handsome trophy donated by Alfred B. MacKay. On the first round each of the countries represented, except Cuba, had at least one horse with a clean performance.

Randle Horse Wins

Giving his horse a beautiful ride, U. S. Randle, of Fairfax, Va., took the blue ribbon in the class for open hunters to be shown at a walk, trot and hand gallop. Mr. Randle rode his handsome chestnut gelding, Primary, who clearly outshone the large and high class field by his easy, relaxed, well-collected gaits together with his top-notch conformation. Washington and its vicinity was well represented in the large class of 33 horses, having 9 entries. Mr. Randle, who incidentally, is making a fine showing at the Garden, may well be proud of this fine win.

Sunday Stables' chestnut gelding, Beau Joe, placed second to Mr. Randle.

Holy Cross Beats Brown, 14 to 12

Worcester, Mass., Nov. 10 (AP)—Holy Cross came from behind in the final 30 seconds to down a hard-fighting Brown eleven, 14-12, at Filton Field this afternoon, before a record crowd of 27,000. Capt. Bill Omsanski scored both Holy Cross touchdowns in the last quarter after sustained marches of 63 and 68 yards. Jim Turner converted on both placement attempts.

Holy Cross had two touchdowns in the first half, but because of off-side penalties and saw their offense stopped twice inside the 10. Brown had two strong attacks halted by pass interceptions on the Holy Cross 8-yard and goal line. Brown suffered a similar fate against Yale last week, losing in the last three minutes.

Jack McLaughry, son of the famed Brown coach, set the stage for his mates early in the first quarter by repeated long gains through the Holy Cross line. Brown made a 71-yard march which was climaxed with Bruno Stepczyk's plunge through left tackle for the 1-yard line for a score. McLaughry's placement was blocked.

McLaughry took advantage of a short Holy Cross punt which he caught on the Crusaders 20, midway

Landon Loses To St. Albans

Score of Game Is 13-6
Hawley Saints' Star Fumble Aids Winners

By Hotspur.

The effective line-plunging of Halfback Bob Hawley enabled St. Albans to score a convincing 13-6 victory over Landon yesterday in a game played before 400 spectators on the Landon field.

Taking the opening kickoff, the striped-jerseyed lads of the Episcopal school moved relentlessly down the field in a series of plunges at the line which eventually produced a score. Hawley furnished the final punch after Bill Alexander, Carrier Hall, and Pete Slingluff had made consistent gains.

The teams waged a see-saw battle during the second and third quarters. St. Albans attempting to increase its lead and the brow-clad Landoners making threat after threat in the hope of catching up. Featured during the periods was the sharp-shooting of Dave Maloney, former Woodcroft Wilson player, whose passes were mostly fumbled and dropped by receivers.

In the fourth period St. Albans took advantage of a fumble by Johnny Amussen, of Landon, on his own 25-yard line to score the winning points. Husky Bill Alexander brought the ball to Landon's 6, from which point Hawley plunged over the line and Hawley carried the ball around left end for the extra point.

Too late to do a great deal of good, Landon began throwing aerials. It was a pass from Maloney to Amussen which tallied Landon's only touchdown, Amussen taking the perfect spiral on the midfield stripe and racing down the right sidelines for the goal.

New York, Nov. 11.—A scrappy New York University team, seeking its first major victory of the season, struck twice in the first period and then made three goal-line stands in the final quarter to turn back a heavily-favored Colgate eleven, 13-7, before a crowd of 25,000 in Yankee Stadium today.

The Red Raiders from the Chango Valley, hoping to save its coach, Andy Kerr, from suffering two straight seasons with five defeats, unleashed a blazing attack in the second quarter but it wasn't enough to overcome the stubborn New Yorkers.

Three times in the final period Colgate, which ended its season today with only two victories and five defeats, drove close to a touchdown—to the 14-yard line, to the 6-inch line and to the 1-yard line. But N. Y. U., which didn't even make a first down in the last half, hurled back all those drives.

New York scored on a lucky break in the opening period when Ed Boell's kick hit Johnny Long and was recovered by Alex Campanis on the Colgate 11. Campanis banged the line twice and went to the 1-yard line from where Stan Mikulka took it over on a reverse. Campanis missed the try for points.

A few minutes later the Violets drove from their own 42 to a touchdown, which came when Boell hurled a 13-yard pass to Danny Dowd, who ran it over. Bill Galu kicked the extra point.

In the last half Colgate was a different team. Backed up to their own 6-yard line midway through the third period on a booming punt by Joe Lamanna, the Raiders marched 94 yards to a score. The big play of the drive was a 38-yard pass, Walter Davis to Don Wemple, who was dropped in his tracks as he caught the ball on the N. Y. U. 1-yard line. Joe Hoague, in two smashes, took it over and then kicked the extra point.

Miami University's hurricane was a destructive force between the 40-yard lines but within scoring territory only a breeze yesterday, as Catholic University pushed over a luck-timed second quarter touchdown to register a 7-0 upset victory before 8,000 Armistice Day fans at Griffith Stadium.

A distinguished gathering, including the Apostolic Delegate, the Most Rev. Archbishop of Baltimore, and many high officials, watched the hurricane huff and puff and pile up 11 first downs to C. U.'s 4 and 196 yards for net damage to 139 yards, but lost the only real break of the game.

Just before the end of the first quarter, Capt. John Kasunich, Catholic University end, smashed through to block and recover Joe Hoppenberg's punt on the Miami 20-yard line. Burke Vidovic and Hank Brostek were thrown for losses and the threat appeared to be averted when Capt. Eddie Dunn, Miami's triple-threat halfback, intercepted a pass from Fiorelino and returned to the Miami 33.

Referee Paves the Way

The referee, however, ruled that a Miami player had interfered with Vidovic, object of Fiorelino's aerial, and the Cards were given a first down on the 5-yard line. On the next play, Brostek cut through a hole over his own right guard and went over for the score.

Farm Income To Increase, Survey States

1938 Drops 13 Per Cent Dairy Products Hold Other Groups Steady

New York, Nov. 11.—In its weekly summary of the general business situation, the Standard Statistics Co. of New York, currently comments as follows:

"Although indications favor a moderate rise in 1939 farm income, forecasts made at this time must be considered highly tentative. A drought could quickly change the picture, and the Government farm program might be greatly altered. Barring some developments of this nature, however, no more than a modest expansion in 1939 farm income can be conservatively forecast. The 1938 total is now placed at $7,500,000,000, a decrease of 13 per cent from 1937.

"A summary of prospective farm income for 1939 by sources points to larger returns from the sale of livestock, fruits, vegetables, and minor crops, reflecting expanded consumer buying power and an increased demand for these farm products. Altogether, they account for about 80 per cent of total agricultural income.

"The income from dairy products, including milk, poultry, and eggs, will probably show little, if any, improvement over 1938 levels, as heavier production may offset increased demand by checking advancing price tendencies. These products represent about 30 per cent of farm income.

"The remaining 20 per cent of agricultural income is accounted for by the grains and cotton, and it is possible that the declining trend of income from these products will not be arrested."

Armour Reports $1,500,000 Loss

Chicago, Nov. 11.—R. H. Cabell, president of Armour & Co., said today preliminary figures of the company's fiscal year ended October 29 indicated a loss of about $1,500,000. The company, he said, sustained losses during the first half of its fiscal year due to declining charges, but these were partly offset when general business conditions improved.

Cabell said the company's final audited report would be issued late in December or early in January.

Briggs Manufacturing Co.

New York, Nov. 11.—Briggs Manufacturing Co., Detroit, makers of automobile bodies, reported for the third quarter of the year net loss of $804,077 by all charges. This compared with net profit in the comparable 1937 quarter of $1,886,640, equal to 95 cents a share in common stock.

Lockheed to Sell Planes to Australia

Burbank, Calif., Nov. 11.—Officials of the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation here announced today receipt of an order from the Australian Air Board for 10 reconnaissance bombing airplanes. Confirmation was received from Canberra, seat of the Australian government, where a preliminary announcement of the purchase was made last week.

The amount of the order is approximately $4,500,000, not including spare parts and extra equipment, which raises the Lockheed backlog of unfilled orders to an all-time high of more than $25,500,000.

Cost Accountants To Hear Dr. Tippetts

The Washington Chapter of the National Association of Cost Accountants will have Charles Sanford Tippetts, dean of the School of Business Administration, University of Pittsburgh, as speaker at their monthly meeting. His talk will be a discussion of the "Present Business Situation With Emphasis on Cost Accounting."

Dr. Tippetts, a graduate of Princeton, has taught at a number of universities throughout the country, including those of Washington and Iowa, and has written a number of text books and other economic and financial articles. The meeting will be held in the Annapolis Hotel, Thursday, November 17, at 8:30 p. m., instead of Wednesday as previously announced.

Insurance Agency Wins Cup

The Washington Agency of the Provident Mutual Life Insurance Co. has been awarded a cup in recognition of the agency's record during October, in which it produced 194 per cent of its quota of new business and led all agencies of its class. General Agent Harold D. Kraft led the drive.

Industry Rate Sets New High For 12 Months

New York, Nov. 11.—The record-breaking fall in industrial activity speeded up this week as operations climbed to the highest levels in 12 months.

The Associated Press seasonally adjusted index jumped to 86.6 per cent of the 1922-30 average from 85.8 the week before and compared with 87.7 a year ago. The latest advance was the sharpest since the spring boom in 1937.

Every major business barometer, save freight carloadings, bettered the expected seasonal trend. The dip in loadings stemmed largely from a smaller movement of coal, as miscellaneous shipments consisting principally of industrial items improved slightly.

Steel mill operations and residential construction hit new peaks for the year, and more topped the comparable week in 1937 by a comfortable margin. Electric power output also established a new 1938 high, while cotton manufacturing ran ahead of the previous year without making a new top.

Steadily rising assembly of 1939 model cars has been a potent factor in the fall recovery drive, executives here adding materially to the volume handled by both steel mills and railroads.

NAPOLEON AND UNCLE ELBY

YES SIR, WE'VE SACRIFICED A LOT OF PLEASANT GRACIOUS LIVING FOR OUR

MODERN EFFICIENCY. DO YOU REMEMBER THE ELEGANT CARRIAGES WITH

THE FLOURISHING COACH DOGS TROTTING BEHIND? THOSE DAYS ARE GONE.

MY FRIEND, GONE FOR GOOD.

Bob Burns Says—

I think the studios are right about runnin' in new faces on the screen ever so often. When an actor is in the business too long, the public gets to know all about him or her and no matter what part they play, they can't hide their real identity.

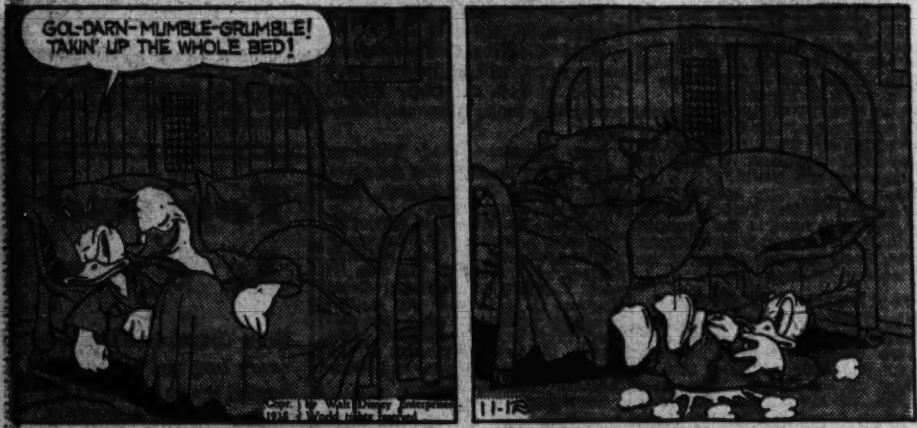

You're supposed to feel sorry for the poor little workin' girl on the screen, but it's kinda hard to work up a lot of sympathy when you know the actress is gettin' $2,000 or $3,000 a week.

6 3/4 Billions Of Money in Circulation

Due to Trade Pickup
Second Highest Figure
Bank Holiday First

Although the average citizen may think his wallet has seen better times, the Federal Reserve Board revealed yesterday that the amount of money in circulation is now at the highest level in history with the exception of the brief period in 1933 when the banks were closed.

The immediate cause of the new high peak for normal business activity is the pickup in business since June.

But underneath the moderate rise caused by increased pay rolls and consumer spending are deeper and sometimes obscure factors originating in changing economic conditions, particularly declining interest rates and their effect on banking practices.

There is no evidence, experts explain, that currency hoarding was resumed during the recession. During the September war scare, foreigners withdrew from the country for hoarding about $15,000,000 of United States currency, but this explains only a fraction of the currency rise this fall.

Withdrawals Heavy

Between the time that Great Britain abandoned the gold standard in the fall of 1931 and the close of 1932, depositors in this country withdrew from banks probably $1,500,000,000 for hoarding. Experts believe a large part of this hoarded money still may be in the hands of the public.

Money in circulation consists of coin and currency outside the Treasury. It is the money held by banks, corporations, businesses of all kinds and the public.

The Reserve Board revealed that in the week ended Wednesday money in circulation totaled $6,744,000,000, or $200,000,000 more than the total for the same date last year. The latest figure was $58,000,000 higher than the total for the previous Wednesday, due chiefly to the election holidays in a number of States.

At this time of year, however, money in circulation normally rises. Experts estimate that currency demands necessitated by Christmas shopping will cause a spurt in the total in circulation between Thanksgiving and Christmas of between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000, increasing the total to the $7,000,000,000 mark or beyond.

$56 Per Person

Assuming that the population of the country is 125,000,000, this would mean a per capita circulation at Christmas of $56.

Only once before has the amount of money in circulation risen to this level. On March 8, 1933, shortly after the bank holiday began, panicky currency hoarding forced the total to an all-time high of $7,338,000,000.

Frightened bank depositors buried and concealed nearly $2,000,000,000 between January 25 and March 8, 1933. Then, after the banks found to be solvent reopened, approximately the same amount was taken from old mattresses, boxes and other places of concealment and again deposited in the banks.

Money in circulation, experts recall, ranged between $4,300,000,000 and $5,100,000,000 in 1928 and 1929. The present level is about $2,000,000,000 higher than the currency requirements of the most active business period in the Nation's history.

Reason Explained

This is largely due, experts explain, to two factors—the service charges which banks throughout the country have been imposing in the face of declining loans and yields on investments, and the drastic reduction in banking facilities which occurred during the prolonged depression.

There probably are other factors, some of them intangible. As a result of the banking changes, it is pointed out, currency-using habits of the public probably have changed. A larger percentage of pay rolls may be in cash now than formerly, but this has not been proved.

Hampton Roads Sewage Law Asked

Norfolk, Va., Nov. 11 (AP)—A Norfolk committee that waged an intensive last-minute campaign to defeat creation of a sanitation district in the Hampton Roads area proposed yesterday that the General Assembly enact legislation prohibiting dumping of raw sewage into Hampton Roads or its estuaries. The committee proposed that each of the communities in the area build its own sewage disposal plants and suggested that the State make some contribution toward construction of these plants.

W. & L. Graduated Kin of Mrs. Buck, 1938 Nobel Winner

Lexington, Va., Nov. 11 (AP)—Washington and Lee University and the town of Lexington took a somewhat personal pride today at the announcement Pearl Buck had won the 1938 Nobel prize for literature. Mrs. Buck, who was graduated from Randolph-Macon Women's College in 1914, lived here for a year before attending the Lynchburg school. Moreover, her father, the late Absalom Sydenstricker, a prominent figure in her writings, received his B. A. degree at Washington and Lee in 1878 and was awarded an honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity in 1908. A brother of Mrs. Buck, Edgar Sydenstricker, was graduated with a B. A. degree from the university in 1902 and took his masters' degree in 1907. The novelist's nephew, Edgar Sydenstricker, Jr., attended W. & L. for one year in 1932-33.

Mrs. Mary Brown Succumbs at 68

Mrs. Mary Frances Brown, 1610 East Capitol street, a life-long resident of Washington, died at her home yesterday after a three-month illness. She was 68.

Mrs. Brown was a member of the Order of the Eastern Star and the Daughters of America. She was a member of the Second Baptist Church.

Mrs. Brown leaves a niece, Mrs. Mabel Marsh, of Boston, and a nephew, Lee Harve, of Washington. Funeral services will be held Monday at the W. W. Chambers funeral home, 517 Eleventh street southeast, with burial in Congressional Cemetery.

Recall Election Slated in Miami

Miami, Nov. 11 (AP)—A recall election for three Miami city commissioners, including Mayor Robert R. Williams, was ordered yesterday by Circuit Judge H. F. Atkinson, for December 15.

A jury was seated today in Criminal Court to try Williams, Commissioner John Dubose and Thomas E. Grady, a rate expert, on a charge of soliciting a $250,000 bribe from the Florida Power & Light Co. to settle a rate controversy. Their indictment on these charges led to the recall order.

10,000 Watch 4-Mile Parade in Frederick

Biggest Armistice Fete
4,000 in Procession
Legion Post Is Sponsor

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 11.—More than 10,000 persons watched a 4-mile-long parade and other events here today as Frederick staged its largest Armistice Day celebration in 20 years. More than 4,000 persons, numerous musical and fraternal organizations and floats were in line.

Francis Scott Key Post, American Legion, sponsored the observation. Members of the Legion started the events this morning by firing 20 aerial bombs in Baker Park.

Prizes were awarded after the parade as follows: Best appearing fraternal organization—First, Pythians Sisters; second, Frederick Chapter, Order of Demolay.

Best school float, Frederick High School.

Best float entered by schoolboy patrol—First, Church Street School; second, Parkway School.

Fire company making best appearance, United Fire Company, of Frederick.

Fire company auxiliary making best appearance, Junior Fire Company, of Frederick.

Best commercial float, Delphay Brothers.

A wreath was placed on the monument to Frederick County's World War heroes, in Memorial Park, following the parade.

Donald Heinicke, William Cooke and Elwood Martak finished in that order in the 6.4-mile marathon staged as part of the program. Heinicke's time for the distance was 35.10 minutes. Eighteen completed.

The Frederick County Young Peoples Union presented a pageant, "The Moral Equivalent of War," to a capacity audience in Winchester Hall tonight.

The Legionnaires climaxed a full program with their annual Armistice Ball in the State Armory tonight.

Virginia Church Halts Digging for Shakespeare Lore

Williamsburg, Va., Nov. 11 (AP)—Officials of Bruton Parish Episcopal Church decided yesterday the "Bacon or Shakespeare" question would remain unanswered here, and Mrs. Marie Bauer, of California, would have to stop digging up their churchyard.

Mrs. Bauer has superintended excavations in search of a vault supposedly containing proof that Bacon was Shakespeare as well as other valuables and manuscripts. The church officials said the excavation Monday was the last that would be permitted. They said the church had no statement to make in regard to Mrs. Bauer's project.

Mrs. Bauer came to Williamsburg last June with a "code" which she said disclosed to her that a vault was located beneath the tower of the church. Workers heaved lustily at picks and shovels, but no vault was discovered in the first excavations authorized by the church.

Miss Givens' Rites Set Today; Noted Educator Auto Victim

Crash Injuries Fatal
She Taught Celebrities
Pupils to Bear Fall

Miss Mary Ella Given, principal of the Elizabeth V. Brown School in Chevy Chase from 1898 to 1933, will be buried in Rock Creek Cemetery today.

She died Thursday night in Emergency Hospital from the effects of injuries suffered in automobile accident.

Miss Given, by her outstanding work in education and her devotion to the community, won the affection of thousands of her pupils, their parents and the teachers who worked with her. When she first went to the one room school it was the only one between Cleveland Park section and Rockville. She saw it grow to a modern school with 500 students before retiring.

Taught Famous Persons

A reception on her retirement was attended by scores of Senators, Government officials, and prominent citizens. Many of them had been taught by the woman who came to be regarded as a distinct part of Northwest Washington. Phone calls to The Post yesterday attested the loss her death brings to the community.

On the twenty-fifth anniversary of the school, the Chevy Chase News wrote: "We have heard people say in regard to our Elizabeth Brown School, 'It doesn't look like a public school.' It is different because Miss Given is there—because she has been there all the years of its life and has set the pace as to what a school should look like and how it should react on the children."

In the "History of the Washington, Past and Present," she is called "one of Washington's foremost women, an outstanding educator, a lady of graciousness and charm."

She was born here July 8, 1870. Her father, William Francis Given, was for many years in the consular service. Her mother, Mary Croghan Given, was a member of one of the city's oldest families.

Went to Harvard and Oxford

Miss Given was educated in public schools, Central High School, Wilson Normal School, George Washington University and studied at Harvard and Oxford. She was a member of the Audubon Society, American Association of University Women and Chevy Chase Women's Club.

Surviving are a sister, Mrs. Emily G. Dickinson, of Washington; a brother, William H. Given, of France, and a nephew, Eldred G. Dickinson.

Funeral services will be held at the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church at 3 p. m. today. Dr. Hillman Hollister will officiate. Former pupils will act as pallbearers.

Attendant Burned At Filling Station

Lloyd Stephens, 28, attendant at a gas station at Sixth and E streets northwest, was badly burned about the hands and face yesterday when the automobile he was filling caught fire.

At Emergency Hospital he was treated for first and second degree burns. The automobile, belonging to Delmas P. Wood, of Sandy Spring, Md., was not damaged.

Mrs. Peyton Dies In Charlottesville

Mrs. Marian Beale Peyton, widow of Francis Bradley Peyton, who was for more than 50 years freight agent of the Southern Railway at Charlottesville, Va., died yesterday morning at her Charlottesville home, aged 86.

She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Graham Harris and Miss Marian Beale Peyton, and four sons, Francis Bradley Peyton and William Herbert Peyton, of Charlottesville; Charles L. B. Peyton, of Chicago; and Philip Harbour Peyton, of North Carolina; also a brother, Frank Beale, of Louisiana.

The funeral will be at 3:30 p. m. tomorrow at Charlottesville.

Hike Down Scott's Run Planned for Tomorrow

The Capital Hiking Club will hold a 3-mile walk down Scott's Run, Va., from Swinks Mill to a gorge and falls tomorrow. They will also visit the Kirke gold mine. Afterward Malcolm Davis, member of the National Geographic-Smithsonian expedition to the Dutch East Indies, will show color movies of wild game collecting. The trip will start from 1416 F street northwest at 2 p. m.

Thief Flees in Pajamas From Gallinger Ward

James Kno, 41, colored, transferred from the District Jail to Gallinger Hospital October 14 to undergo a minor operation, yesterday escaped from that institution. He was wearing pajamas and a bath robe he picked up as he fled.

Kno, whose home is in the 200 block of R street northwest, had been in the District Jail since being sentenced to an 18-month-to-3-year term September 3, on a charge of housebreaking.
